

Numbers on the wrong side.

A further reminder that MLB uniforms are lettered by real people who sometimes make mistakes.

… and above and below are photos of 2000s Reds jerseys with the numbers on the on the wrong side for that style.

Over the years I have collected enough different images of 1999-tagged jerseys like the ones at right to conclude that an entire set must have been made this way. Perhaps the team changed its mind? That's not so strange. The part that is odd is that we have game photos showing players wearing them that way.

Pete Rose Jr., a late 1997 call-up, has his numbers on the wrong side of his jersey too.

© GameWornGuides.com

I will be the first to admit I can never remember how many “Ns” and “Ts” there are in Cincinnati, but I never get mixed-up about how many “I’s” there are. Does anyone notice a problem here?

1999: When the Reds showed up for Spring Training Photo Day, their new-for-1999 jerseys were waiting, but so were old 1998 undershirts with the large wishbone-C on them. The correct undershirts for 1999 have Mr. Red on the sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

Retail St. Patrick's Day

I believe that this 2000-2002 style Reds St. Patrick's jersey was only sold at retail and not used by the team on the field, regardless of the Authentic Collection tagging. I welcome photo evidence that proves otherwise.

Huh?

Advertised for sale on eBay as game worn, I wonder which game this came from, and whether the other players were laughing.

Who?

Reds 2019 Wyatt Stahan in the game with no name or number

Wow!

The caption to this photo reads: FEBRUARY 25. 2011: Brandon Phillips relaxes outside as he tweets away. He has a diamond encrusted bit of bling created that features his last name and number on a jersey-shaped form.

Phillips' mini-jersey isn't 100% accurate, but kudos to his jeweler for making it recognizable as a Reds jersey!

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 Opening Day Joe Nuxhall Tribute

- March 31, 2008: To honor the passing of Joe Nuxhall, longtime Reds' player and broadcaster, the entire team donned jerseys with #41 Nuxhall in pregame ceremonies. Oddly, the front of each jersey carried the player's normal number. Reds starter Aaron Harang wore a Nuxhall jersey number 41 (front and back) for the game.
- The team wore a commemorative patch on the right sleeve of all game uniforms and batting practice jerseys during the 2008 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Prototype Digital Camouflage

Above: Tell-tale signs in the tagging that show this is a prototype.

Below: The jersey as it appeared on-field in 2014.

The Reds went all-in on camo in 2014, but before they did, they wanted to see a sample to make sure it was right for them. Here, we have one of the samples, and since it is identical to the camo jerseys they wore from 2014-2017, it clearly made the grade.

This jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, it is size 46, a common sample size, and the "PLAYER" and "14" on back is standard for a sample, where "14" represents the year for which the sample was made.

Next, the "0630" code on the laundry tag indicates that it is a team-issue Cool Base jersey. Further, it carries interior tagging with the tell-tale sample coding "RED-AJ-DIGICAM-D1-2-2014" indicating it is version 1 and sample 2 (D1-2) of a Reds (RED) alternate jersey (AJ) in digital camo (DIGICAM) for 2014. It is possible other such samples were made for different takes on a camo jersey, but no such examples have yet to turn up.

2014

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Oddball Opening Day Throwbacks

For Opening Day, March 29, 2019, the Reds kicked off their year-long sesquicentennial celebration by inviting three team legends for a pregame ceremony. Johnny Bench, Joe Morgan, and Eric Davis all appeared and wore throwback jerseys – Bench and Morgan from 1976 and Davis from 1990. Contrary to recent throwbacks, they were not made by Majestic or Mitchell and Ness. Instead, all three were created by Rawlings. Rawlings was the Reds' home uniform supplier for the years in question, but this is where the logic stops. The 1990 Davis jersey has a rarely seen 1987 Rawlings tag variant with a sleeve logo from 2000-2002, when Rawlings was no longer making Reds jerseys. Meanwhile, the two 1976 jerseys have tags from 1988-1990. Though most of the other details on the jerseys are accurate to the originals (aside from a slightly different NOB font on the Davis jersey), there seems to be no rhyme or reason to the choices Rawlings made on these jerseys – or, in fact, the choice to have Rawlings make them in the first place when BOTH of these styles were reproduced by Majestic for throwback games the very same year.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Prototype Turn Back the Clock to 1995

These photos show one of the sample jerseys created for the Reds for their season-long series of throwbacks in 2019. This example is the 1995 home vest reproduction, as indicated by the “Player” name on back and “95” uniform number. The interior team tagging is not visible in photos, which would provide more info about this sample, but the fact that the jersey is size 46 - a typical size for Majestic samples - reinforces its status as a prototype. It is possible, though not confirmed, that this was the jersey that was displayed when the team unveiled all of its throwbacks for 2019, as seen in the two photos at right.

© GameWornGuides.com

Apostrophe Catastrophe*

Credit to Paul Lukas for coining this term, which we borrow to use in a different context.*

In their very long and storied history, the Reds have had only one dozen players whose last name contained an apostrophe. Only two of those, Brian O'Grady and Riley O'Brien have played between 2007-2025, the period during which the teams uses its fancy "gaslight" font for player names and numbers. Like most teams, the Reds have some special characters available in their player lettering font. This usually includes hyphens, tildes, and yes, apostrophes. An apostrophe is a very small and usually simple mark, but the team's ornate presentation of it makes it quite complicated, even if the complications aren't visible from afar. They stand out much more when the mark is stripped down to one color, as it is on the teams former St. Patrick's Day jerseys and military appreciation jerseys.

When changing to one color, the team had to make a choice about which part of the mark to represent. It seems clear that they chose the top layer, arguably the most detailed of them all and certainly the smallest. The result is less an apostrophe than it is a blob that looks a little like a leaf or even a misshapen comic book speech bubble. For St. Patrick's Day, maybe they can get away with saying it is a shamrock or four-leaf clover. But in reality, it is an example of when over-zealous design doesn't account for legibility in all applications.

Above left: A closer look at the three-color version of the apostrophe from the MLB Style Guide, showing its full form as well as its three component parts.

Above right: Also from the MLB Style Guide, the official one-color version of the mark used on the team's 2018-2021 alternate military appreciation jersey. Side-by-side, these images show that the one-color version is simply the top layer of the three-color version, which does not readily read as an apostrophe.

Above: Details from Riley O'Brien's 2021 (left) and 2022 (center, right) St. Patrick's Say jerseys, showing the odd one-color treatment of the apostrophe in his name.

Below: Other examples of the apostrophe that read better in three-color format as the mark was designed on O'Brien's 2021 road jersey and Brian O'Grady's 2019 home jersey. Through 2024, they are the only two players with last-name apostrophes to play for the Reds since the team adopted this lettering style in 2007.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Mr. Red Head(ed) in the Wrong Direction

Early 2024 (well, much of 2024 really) was a trying time for Nike and Fanatics with the mishandling of the switch to Vapor Premier Elite. Without question, there were some very big mistakes. There were small ones too... and at the risk of piling on to Nike and Fanatics again, the Reds and their ad patches are partly to blame for this particular error too.

With the Reds new ad patch in 2023, team patches varied sleeves based on player handedness. Because two of the team's patches were "directional" characters, intended to be looking/facing forward, two versions of the Running Mr. Red patch and the Mr. Red Head patch had to be made.

Early in 2024, Reds Pitcher Alexis Garcia had a Mr. Red Head patch looking back instead of looking ahead. From photo evidence we've seen, it appeared in a couple of games early that season and was fixed soon after. We have yet to see that version of his 2024 red alternate become available to the hobby. Given the error, however small, perhaps we never will.

March 30, 2024

April 6, 2024

September 5, 2024

2024

© GameWornGuides.com

Commemorative Patches

Reds Patches

For the first homestand (only) in 1988, the Reds wore a black memorial band (more of a strip) sewn on the right sleeve. It was only about eight inches long, and did not go all the way around the arm. It was worn for the passing of Ted Kluszewski on March 29, 1988. The Reds wore it April 4 and 7 against the Cardinals, and April 8-9-10 against the Astros. When they returned from a road trip on April 18, the black stripe was gone from the uniforms.

Previous editions of this book stated that the stripe was put there to memorialize both Kluszewski and also Reds 1930s Hall of Fame outfielder Edd Roush, who died a week before Klu. I have since researched period articles that say that this was not the case, and that Roush was (probably unintentionally) snubbed by the Reds; the memorial was for Kluszewski only. I wonder if this embarrassment had anything to do with the fact that the memorial was removed after being used for a single week?

1994

(Above) I recall seeing this patch on TV on Reds jerseys in 1994, and I wondered what that black blotch was on their chests. This detailed photo (above) makes a difficult transition to a cloth patch.

1990 World Series American Flag patch – home and away.

- 1988: All Star Game, right sleeve.
- 1988: Ted Kluszewski memorial armband (one week).
- 1990 World Series: Reds wore American flag on their right chest in support of Operation Desert Shield in the Middle East.
- 1994: Special Reds-only MLB 125th patch (Cincinnati Red Stockings). Left chest above team logo on home vest, right sleeve on road jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000

2002

2003

2008

2011

2015

2016

June 25, 2016

June 26, 2016

- 2000: 25/10 Patch (commemorating the 25th and 10th anniversaries of their 1975 and 1990 World Series wins.
- 2002: Farewell Riverfront Stadium.
- 2003: Inaugural Patch -- new stadium.
- 2008: “Nuxy” memorial for former player and broadcaster Joe Nuxhall; worn on right sleeve.
- 2011: Sparky Anderson memorial, right sleeve.
- 2015: All-Star Game (all season).
- 2016: Bernie Stowe patch on right sleeve, all season on home, road, and alt. red only for former clubhouse attendant who died in February.
- 2016, June 25-26: “14” patch for Pete Rose on left chest on home white (June 25) and red alternate (June 26) jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

June 17, 2017

2019

2019 home and alt red

2019 road gray

2019

- 2017, June 17: Pete Rose statue dedication patch, right sleeve
- 2019: Frank Robinson “20” memorial patch on left chest of all jerseys.
- 2019: Reds 150 patch, two versions. Ballpark façade version on home white and alternate red, plain version on road gray. Right sleeve all jerseys.
- 2021: Joe Morgan “8” memorial patch
- 2025: “14” memorial patch for Pete Rose

2021

2025

© GameWornGuides.com

2023-2024 Reds Advertising Patches

Both of the team's Mr. Red patches now come in two versions based on which sleeve the ad patch takes. The "reversed" Running Mr. Red (which is worn on the right sleeve of the home jersey) has his wishbone-C logo on the wrong side of the jersey as a result of the change.

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Reds struck a sponsor patch deal with Kroger, a grocery chain. The patches first appeared in Spring Training 2023.

The patch is white with the Kroger logo in blue on all jerseys except the City Connect, where the patch is black with the logo in white.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch. This required creating two versions of each Mr. Red patch the team uses - running Mr. Red on the home jersey and Mr. Red head on the red alternate jersey. The normal and reversed logos ensure that the character always faces forward regardless of which sleeve he is on.

© GameWornGuides.com

Reds Postseason Patches

1990 World Series (left sleeve)

2013 NL Wild Card (right sleeve)

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Tony Cloninger 1971 Cincinnati Reds Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 7, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1107J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description/As Received: Rawlings cream-colored flannel seven-button size 46 (marked and measured) Cincinnati Reds jersey originally issued to pitcher Tony Cloninger, who at 6' 0" and 210 lbs would have been the appropriate size for this jersey. Plain jersey body without trim, four-gusseted hole diamond-shaped vent panels sewn into the underarms. Sewn on white chain-stitched REDS on red twill team crest patch stitched to the left chest. As received, it wore the name/number KING 37. It was reported to me and is highly probable that this jersey had been repurposed for use in an old timers' game, as pitcher Clyde King had worn #37 for the 1953 Reds.

In 1971, Tony Cloninger appeared in 28 games for the Reds, mostly as a middle-reliever, starting eight games and compiling a 3-6 record with a 3.88 ERA. Cloninger enjoyed a 12 year career, mostly with the Braves and Reds, finishing in 1972 with the Cardinals. A power pitcher, Cloninger compiled a MLB 113–97 record with 1,120 strikeouts and a 4.07 ERA in 1,7672/3 innings pitched. He enjoyed his best year for the 1965 Braves, with career highs in wins (24), strikeouts (211), ERA (3.29), complete games (16), innings (279) and games started (40). Regarded as a tough fireball pitcher, Cloninger also was an occasional power hitter. He compiled a career batting average of .192, with 67 RBIs and 11 home runs, including five in the 1966 season. After retiring, Cloninger served as a bullpen coach for the New York Yankees (1992–2001) and the Boston Red Sox in 2002. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Restoration Performed: Stripping off the KING 37 lettering, the ghosts of CLONINGER 40 were readily apparent beneath when viewed on the light table. Removal of the replacement lettering was uneventful, except that the "3" on the back left a minor darker colored glue stain beneath it that is still slightly visible after restoration, even after cleaning. New lettering was cut using the ghosts matched to team patterns for 1971 and was stitched directly over the original ghosts.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings red "Action Tailored" tag noting the size as 46 in the correct tag style for 1971; sewn inside the button flap on the front shirt tail. Beneath it is the familiar six line white washing instructions tag, with red writing and a patterned blue border, Pinch-sewn under its right border is a small white flag tab that reads SET 1 #8P 1971

Wear & Repairs: The jersey body is in very good original condition showing normal wear that would have been attributed to a pitcher for a single season's use. It is free of damage or repairs. Puckering of the flannel fabric beneath the front team crest shows evidence of repeated washings, as the twill emblem typically shrinks more aggressively than the flannel fabric it is stitched to. This example shows no red color bleed as is often seen Reds jerseys of this vintage. Notably, in 1972 the MLB Reds switched to new double-knit uniforms, so after spring training, these old flannels became mostly obsolete. I would judge that this jersey was spared a trip to the minor leagues for reuse, as was common with larger sized jerseys like this one that were less useful for younger players in the minors anyway.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

On this page, top left as received prior to restoration. After removing the replacement lettering, the ghosts of the original name and numbers were apparent and nicely matched my patterns for the 1971 team fonts. New lettering was cut from University Red tackle twill and restitched in place.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition: The front crest is original and it is properly player name/number restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by pitcher Tony Cloninger of the 1971 Cincinnati Reds.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Tom Seaver 1982 Game Worn Cincinnati Reds Home Jersey

Examination Date: December 29, 2020 Certification Number: 20-1229J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1982 Cincinnati Reds, Tom Seaver #41 size 46 "Rawlings" pullover white double knit jersey. 1" Red/white/red V-Neck trim, 1 3/4" red/white knit sewn-in sleeve end trim. The Reds team crest sewn on the left chest is made of red twill and white chain-stitch embroidery. Seaver's number 41 is stitched in the Reds' "University Red" shade of twill, to the right chest and the back, "SEAVER" in the Reds' distinctive large , 4" tall letters arched above. All lettering is exact to Reds team specs, in size, style and color. The size is correct for Seaver, compared to other exemplars.

In 1982, Seaver played in his 17th season of Major League Baseball, and was in his sixth and final season with the Reds. That year he went 5 and 13 in 21 starts.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings red tag in the style that first appeared in 1972 and was used through 1984 is sewn inside the front right tail. A white flag tab designates SET 1 1982. Team tagging is correct for 1982 Reds game jerseys, which were not tagged with player name or numbers.

Provenance: The jersey is accompanied by an undated and un-notarized letter on Lelands' Auctions letterhead hand-signed by Priscilla Stowe, widow of longtime Reds clubhouse manager Bernie Stowe (employed by the Reds 1947-2013; died in 2016) claiming that her husband had brought it home with him and had owned it for many years.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is in good condition with definite signs of wash and wear. All stitching remains tight, and the front team crest that usually is the part of period Reds' jerseys that shows the hardest use is still in very good condition with no discernible puckering of the cloth beneath. The tails are just slightly cleaner than the jersey body indicating on-field use. The nylon sleeve end trim has evenly, slightly yellowed with age to a light cream-color. There are some abrasions on the jersey tails, especially on the bottom center of the rear tail where there is a slice almost 1" long. The red Rawlings tag is puckered from wash. A light table examination shows that all lettering is original without alteration. Compared to other Reds jersey we have examined of this vintage, this was clearly pulled from service after the season ended and was spared the fate of most period Reds jersey that went on to be beaten to death in multiple years of Spring Training, regular season reissue, or use in the minor leagues.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Tom Seaver of the Cincinnati Reds in 1982.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Dave Parker 1984 Game Worn Cincinnati Reds Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-1101J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1984 Cincinnati Reds, Dave Parker #39 size 48 with three inches extra length "Rawlings" pullover white double knit jersey. 1" Red/white/red V-Neck trim, 1 3/4" red/white knit sewn-in sleeve end trim. The Reds team crest sewn on the left chest is made of red twill with white chain-stitch embroidery. Parker's number 39 is stitched in the Reds' "University Red" shade of twill, to the right chest and the back, "PARKER" in the Reds' distinctive large , 4" tall letters arched above. All lettering is exact to Reds team specs, in size, style and color. The size and special tailoring is correct for Parker, compared to other exemplars. The jersey is signed "Dave Parker 39" on the outer left front tail. I have no opinion on the authenticity of autographs.

After rising to true stardom in Pittsburgh as a Pirate 1973-1983, Parker became a free agent after the 1983 season and signed with his hometown Cincinnati Reds 1984-1987. There, he regained much of the the form that made him a star with the Pirates. In 1984 he played in 156 games and batted .285 with 16 home runs. Wikipedia: "In 1985, he enjoyed his best season since he won the 1978 MVP with a .312 batting average, 34 home runs, and 125 RBI. Parker finished second in 1985 MVP voting to Willie McGee. Parker was also the winner of the League's first-ever Home Run Derby in 1985."

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings red tag in the style that first appeared in 1972 and was used through 1984 is sewn properly inside the front right tail. A white flag tab designates SET 1 1984. A secondary tag is sewn above the set flag, "3 inches extra length". Measuring the jersey confirms the size is correct and special tailoring is present. Team tagging is correct for 1984 Reds game jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is in very good condition with definite signs of wash and wear. The red twill lettering has been burnished from washing and has lost some of its original sheen. The stitching remains generally tight with a few loose threads, and the embroidered front team crest that is usually the part of period Reds' jerseys that shows the hardest use is still in very good condition, without the commonly seen color-runs, and with some twill puckering of the emblem yet without discernible puckering of the cloth beneath. The long back tail is just slightly cleaner than the jersey body indicating on-field use. There are some dirt marks on the front tail. The nylon sleeve end trim is in excellent, unfaded and unstained condition. The red Rawlings tag is puckered from wash. A light table examination shows that all lettering is original without alteration. Compared to other Reds jersey we have examined of this vintage, its condition suggests that it was pulled from service after the season ended and was spared the fate of most period Reds jersey that went on to be abused in multiple years of Spring Training, regular season reissue, or use in the minor leagues.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It is specially tailored and has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Dave Parker of the Cincinnati Reds in 1984.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

1985 or 1986 Pete Rose Autographed Home Game Used Jersey

Examination Date: May 9, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0509J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: white pullover-style home Cincinnati Reds jersey of #14 Pete Rose. Size 43 tagged, measures as a size 44. The jersey was made by Goodman and Sons of Los Angeles California. The Reds two-layer (red over white) tackle twill team crest is on the front left chest. (Prior to 1985, team crests had been chain stitched) 2" Red/white sewn-in knit trim is at the end of each sleeve, and the V-neck is banded by red/white/red knit trim. The player number "14" is on front and back in the proper font and size, red outlined with white, the white outlining was a change for 1985, as perviously all lettering was one color; red. Player name on back "ROSE" is in the correct, tall 4 1/4" red over white twill. The jersey is autographed boldly "Pete Rose" on the front of the jersey below the Reds crest. I have no professional opinion on the authenticity of the autograph. As received this jersey had a JSA certification sticker on the front which is almost certainly for the autograph. Unfortunately it was applied directly over the size marking and I needed to remove the label so I could evaluate the jersey. Pictures are provided before and after removing this tag.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The W.A. Goodman manufacturer's tag is sewn to the outside left tail, including washing instructions and the unusual size designation of "43". No other team or player tagging is present, as is correct. Goodman made the Reds' home jerseys (only) in 1985 and 1986, and Pete Rose, now late in his career and the holder of many MLB records, was well aware of the value of his game worn jerseys in the burgeoning collector hobby. Because in this time period there were no holograms or barcoded labels on jerseys or MLB authentication program, we are aware that Rose devised his own method to profit from his game worn gear. He ordered the manufacturer to tag only jerseys issued to him for game use with the odd size of "43". Unverified, but we are told by those close to the organization that Rose would order his own jerseys, then after wearing them for a number of games, he would autograph them and sell them himself as game worn. The odd size designation on any autographed jersey was said to be his own sort of control that any such item in the collector domain that had actually been purchased from him. I can recall hearing that for a number of years during his career, Rose refused to sign fans' jerseys presented to him at signing events to preserve the value of his own actual game-worn jerseys that he was offering, and I recall seeing notification of a signing event where this stipulation was noted. As is typical of most signed jerseys offered as team issued or game worn from this period, there is no provenance accompanying the item. For perspective, consider

Continued on next page

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

the original buyer, satisfied that he was purchasing the item from the star or his reputable agent, paid a fair price for it and the deal was done. There was little or no consideration by either buyer or seller to provide provenance useful at the future sale of such an item. Whenever I authenticate an item like this, I flatbed-scan all of the lettering and match it exactly to my team templates for the fonts. This one matches exactly, without any exceptions, Reds Goodman and Sons fonts for 1985 and 1986.

Wear and Repairs: This jersey is clean and shows signs of good use, mostly in the puckering of the manufacturer tagging, the softening of the lettering, and fraying along the edges of some sewn elements. A light table evaluation shows that all lettering is original and without contrivance.

Additional Observation: While it is difficult to photomatch Reds jerseys of this vintage because they are so plain-colored and unadorned, this one has a small characteristic which may make it possible to do so if someone wanted to get detailed enough. There is a trapped stray red thread on the front #4 that might be visible in period photos (that element pictured in this document). I do not do photo matching, and my cursory evaluation of photos available through the major news services 1985-1986 did not disclose any photos that showed this detail, but I surely did not look at every source and every available photo. Because of his pursuit of the major league hit record, Rose was extensively photographed, during 1985 especially. There are surely hundreds of photos of him in various photo archives, starting with the Cincinnati news media, that might be searched.

At left- JSA tag covering the tagging, removed for the purposes of this evaluation. At right, the from number "4" showing the captive red thread that might be useful in further photo identification. Below, the very large autograph on front.

Conclusion: This jersey has all the proper hallmarks of a Cincinnati Reds Pete Rose team-issued home game jersey of 1985-1986. It displays strong wear from use and washing. It is properly lettered and lacks contrivance. In my professional opinion it is an authentic game-used jersey.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Johnny Bench 1983 Cincinnati Reds (Final Season) Road Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: August 23, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0823J02

This letter will serve as the opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1983 size 44 Wilson gray pullover Cincinnati Reds road jersey, #5 Johnny Bench. Size is correct for the player at this stage of his career. White/red 1 ½" sewn-in knit trim on the sleeve ends, 1" red/white/red v-neck trim. Red "CINCINNATI" vertically-arched across the front in the team template font. Player number 5 is sewn on the left chest and on the back, "BENCH" arched on the back, all in red. All fonts are correct for the 1983 Reds.

1983 was the final year of Johnny Bench's Hall-of-Fame career, 1967-1983, all spent with the Reds. In 1983 Bench played in 110 games and had 310 at-bats, hitting .255 with 12 home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag appropriate for 1983 is stitched to the outside front left tail. To its left is a rectangle of knit fabric with "83 1" hand chain-stitched on it in the familiar style of the Wilson factory stitcher. Wilson was the exclusive maker of Reds road jerseys in 1983. All tagging matches exemplars.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that all lettering is original without contrivance. The jersey is in very good condition, but shows definite signs of repeated use. All stitching is tight. There are some stains on it; on the sleeve tops and including a long brownish stain (possibly tobacco) on the front center below the player number. The typical shoulder-top abrasion from the use catcher's gear is not present on this example, reasonable because Bench played that position only five games in 1983, starting all the other games at first and third bases.

Conclusion: This jersey is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash-wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue and was worn by Johnny Bench of the Cincinnati Reds during the 1983 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Tom Seaver 1980 Cincinnati Reds Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: August 14, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0814J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Cincinnati Reds Wilson gray pullover-style size 46 jersey issued to #41 Tom Seaver. "Cincinnati" is vertically arched in red tackle twill across the chest. 2" red/white sewn-in red and white knit trim is at the end of each sleeve, and the V-neck is banded by red/white/red knit trim with the proper team-specification 1/8" thick white line on the neck trim. The player's number "41" is on front left and back in the proper red color, font, and size. Player name on back "SEAVER" is in the correct, tall 4" red twill, properly radially arched. Size 46 is appropriate for Seaver to have worn in 1980, matching other credibly authenticated examples. I pay special attention to the unique number and alphabet lettering used by the Reds, as well as the specifications of the neck and sleeve end trim, as, unfortunately, inauthentic examples abound.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturer tag is the proper style for 1980 and is sewn outside the front left tail, in the correct location matching other exemplars. "80 1" (which represents the 1980 season and set 1) is hand-embroidered in red chain stitch, in the familiar writing style of the Wilson stitcher, onto a rectangle of same gray knit fabric, and is then zig zag sewn directly above the Wilson tag. Wilson was the sole contracted maker of Reds road jerseys in 1980.

Wear & Repairs: Unlike so many Reds jersey of this era, all lettering on this one is original and un-tampered with. The Reds were a frugal organization and frequently reissued used jerseys to call-up players and to invitees in spring training. Yet, this one was spared that fate, as a light table examinations shows that it wears its original lettering. This jersey shows evidence of much repeated wash and wear, with all twill burnished, all lettering has slightly shrunk (the NOB is 3 7/8" instead of the original 4") and lacking sheen. The zig zag stitching is failing especially on the back numbers and the centermost letters of the player name on back, the most typical places for thread to fail from much wearing and washing, where the inside of the garment rubs repeatedly on the wearer's back. The thread is also coming loose in spots on the front numbers. It remains tight on the CINCINNATI on the chest. Someone has done an amateur (somewhat careless and unauthentic) job of reinforcing the stitching of the back numbers which were clearly starting to get rather loose by applying a very tight straight stitch around the edges in dark red thread, unlike any MLB repair that would have been made. Through this, the jersey body itself does not show extensive game wear/abuse. I would offer the opinion that this jersey was worn by Seaver, and then likely enjoyed by whomever acquired it— worn frequently and washed as needed over the years. While its appearance remains quite good, the wash-wear it shows is in excess that would be expected by a pitcher's jersey, even if that jersey was used as an emergency backup for a second season in the majors, which it probably was not. Reds players were issued two sets of home and road jerseys each year.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good to very good used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and other than the non-MLB reinforcing stitching to the back numbers has no alterations of any kind. It has accurate team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was worn by Tom Seaver of the 1980 Cincinnati Reds.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Authenticity

Dave Concepcion 1982 Cincinnati Reds Road Gray Game Jersey

Examination Date: June 4, 2019 Certification Number 06042019-1

This letter will serve as the opinion of The Dream Shop LLC regarding the item in review.

Dave Concepcion was the star shortstop of the legendary "Big Red Machine", a Cincinnati squad that dominated the National League and also won the World Series two consecutive years in 1975-1976. Concepcion played his entire nineteen-year career with the Reds, from 1970 through 1988. He finished his career with 2326 hits, and an impressive .972 fielding percentage. He was a nine-time All-Star, and appeared in four World Series. In 1982, he appeared in 147 games and hit .287 in 572 at-bats.

Description: Pullover Wilson gray full-weight knit jersey in size 40, the correct size for the player. All lettering is red. "Cincinnati" is vertically arched across the chest. The player number "13" is sewn on front left and on the back, and Concepcion's very long name is squeezed in using the Reds' signature 4" tall player name lettering. Red/white/Red knit V-Neck trim with red/write 1" sewn in knit sleeve end trim. Concepcion's number "13" is sewn on the left front and on the back in the correct size and font as used by the 1982 Reds.

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: Wilson made the Reds road jerseys exclusively, while Rawlings made their home ones 1970-1984. The Wilson manufacturer tag sewn on the outside left tail is of the correct era, the style that they used on on-field jerseys 1978-1985. The jersey size "40" is included on that tag. Directly above the Wilson tag is sewn a rectangle of gray warp-knit fabric, the same fabric that the jersey is made from. On this tag is hand-chain-stitched in pinkish-red thread "82 1" indicating 1982, set 1. The "handwriting" style of this chain-stitch writing is identical to other Reds team issued jerseys of 1982.

Wear & Repairs: A sewing examination shows that the team tag "82 1" embroidery thread is pinkish in color. I suspect it is red cotton thread that was bleached in washing. The rest of the red thread on the jersey attaching names. Wordmark and numbers is bright and unbleached. All of the lettering on the jersey has its thread intact, and the stitching signature is the same on elements, leading me to conclude it was all sewn at the same time, at the Wilson factory. The Wilson size tag is puckered and loose, and this is the place where the degree of wash-wear is most easily seen. The tag is original and is held in place with a straight-stitch (not zig zag) and on this one it remains attached on only three sides. This indicates significant use and many washings to me.

Conclusion: I can conclude that this is a worn and washed, team-issued, game-ready jersey made for Dave Concepcion of the Cincinnati Reds in 1982. jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits significant use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It was certainly made at the Wilson shop. Its wear could be attributed to game use, though this fact may be further cemented by an attempt to photo-match the jersey to game photos from the 1982 season. In particular, observing the intersection of the letters of the long player name and the various seams of the jersey may make it identifiable in game action.

Bill Henderson
Authenticator

The Dream Shop, LLC http:/TheDream.Shop Bill@TheDream.Shop

Letter of Professional Opinion

Pete Rose 1988 Cincinnati Reds Home (Manager) Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: August 29, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0829J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White pullover-style Rawlings-made home Cincinnati Reds jersey of manager Pete Rose. Size 44 tagged; measures as a 46. The Reds two-layer (red over white) tackle twill team crest is on the front left chest. 1 3/4" Red/white/red sewn-in knit trim is at the end of each sleeve, and the V-neck is banded by red/white/red knit trim. 1988 All-Star patch is stitched to the left sleeve, as worn by all Reds in 1988. The player number "14" is on front and back in the in red outlined with white, in the proper font as used by the Reds. Player name on back "ROSE" is in the correct, tall 4 1/8" red over white twill. Size 44 is what Rose wore through most of the second half of his career, the fact that the jersey is tagged a 44 when it is actually bigger was sometimes done with a wink as a "courtesy" for older players. The numbers on back are autographed by Rose, and inscribed "Charlie Hustle" and "4256 Hit King". I have no professional opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings manufacturer's tag in the proper style for 1988 is sewn to the inside of the left tail, including the size designation and washing instructions. Pinch sewn under the right side of the tag is a flag tab marked SET 1 1988. The Rawlings manufacturer script logo is direct embroidered in red at the end of the right sleeve, just above the knit trim, correct for 1988.

Wear and Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that all lettering is original and without contrivance. The jersey shows heavy wear not totally consistent with game use; it has clusters of light bluish stains inside the garment, and a number of small holes and pulls on the front. There is a torn round hole about 1/4" in diameter under the manufacturer tag, as well as a few dots of black marker. Probably 75% of the thread holding the sewn elements to the jersey has failed, especially the vertical lines of the stitched numbers and letters. As manager, this wear is excessive and not consistent with would be expected from a single season of use. However, that wear is explained in an (un-notarized) letter that accompanies the item, signed by Don Breen, former VP of Business & Marketing for the Reds (1986-1988) that Pete Rose gave this jersey to Breen's son, who wore and washed it often, The item is also accompanied by a ticket stub for a 2018 signing event by Rose, which is assumedly where the autographs were obtained, most certainly after the heavy wear to the jersey had occurred.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Rick Mahler 1989 Cincinnati Reds Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: October 19, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1019J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White pullover-style Rawlings-made home Cincinnati Reds jersey of pitcher Rick Mahler. Size 44 tagged and measured. The Reds two-layer (red over white) tackle twill team crest is on the front left chest. 1 3/4" Red/white/red sewn-in knit trim is at the end of each sleeve, and the V-neck is banded by red/white/red knit trim. The player number "42" is on front and back in the in red outlined with white, in the proper font as used by the Reds in 1990. Player name on back "MAHLER" is in the correct, tall 4 1/4" red over white twill. Size 44 is reasonable for the player, at 6' 1" and 202 lbs.

In a thirteen-year MLB career spent mostly with the Braves, Mahler played for the Reds in 1989-1990. In 1990 he appeared in 40 games for the Reds, going 7-6 with a 3.83 ERA.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings manufacturer's tag is sewn to the inside of the left tail, including washing instructions and the in-between size designation of "44". Pinch sewn on the right side of the tag is a tab marked SET 1 1989. The Rawlings manufacturer script logo is direct embroidered in red at the end of the right sleeve, just above the knit trim, correct for 1989.

Wear and Repairs: This jersey is clean and crisp and shows signs of light use, mostly in the slight puckering of the manufacturer tag and the slight softening of the edges of the sewn twill lettering. A light table evaluation shows that all lettering is original and without contrivance.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use and wash wear. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Rick Mahler of the Cincinnati Reds during the 1989 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Glenn Braggs 1990 Cincinnati Reds Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: October 19, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1019J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: white pullover-style Rawlings-made home Cincinnati Reds jersey of outfielder #15 Glenn Braggs. Size 50 tagged but measured as a 52. The Reds two-layer (red over white) tackle twill team crest is on the front left chest. 1 3/4" Red/white sewn-in knit trim is at the end of each sleeve, and the V-neck is banded by red/white/red knit trim. The player number "15" is on front and back in the in red outlined with white, in the proper font as used by the Reds in 1990. Player name on back "BRAGGS" is in the correct, tall 4 1/4" red over white twill. Size 50 with extra length is a reasonable size for the player, at 6' 3" and 210 lbs.

In a seven year MLB career, Braggs played for the Reds 1990-1992. In 1990 he appeared in 92 games and hit .237 with 8 home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings manufacturer's tag is sewn to the inside of the left tail, including washing instructions and the in-between size designation of "50". Pinch sewn on the right side of the tag are two tabs- one marked SET 1 1990, the other sewn on all 4 sides marked '2" extra length'. The Rawlings manufacturer script logo is direct embroidered in red at the end of the right sleeve, just above the knit trim, correct for 1990.

Wear and Repairs: This jersey is clean and crisp but does show signs of light use, mostly in the slight puckering of the manufacturer tag and a few small stains. A light table evaluation shows that all lettering is original and without contrivance.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use and wash wear. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Glenn Braggs of the Cincinnati Reds during the 1990 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Jack Armstrong 1990 Cincinnati Reds Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: October 19, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1019J04

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray pullover-style Rawlings-made home Cincinnati Reds jersey of pitcher #40 Jack Armstrong. Size 44 tagged and measured. "CINCINNATI" tackle twill team crest in red over white arched across the chest. 1 3/4" Red/white sewn-in knit trim is at the end of each sleeve, and the V-neck is banded by red/white/red knit trim. The player number "15" is on front and back in the in red outlined with white, in the proper font as used by the Reds in 1990. Player name on back "ARMSTRONG" is in the correct, tall 4 1/4" red over white twill. While the style is consistent with other 1990 Reds jerseys in our archives, no other examples of Armstrong game jerseys are present in our database. Typically a player this tall would have a jersey with extra length added, and while it is not marked as having extra length, it is 35" collar to tail, two inches longer than normal. It is therefore reasonable for the player, at 6' 5" and 215 lbs.

In a seven year MLB career spent with the Reds, Indians, Marlins and Rangers, Armstrong played for the Reds in 1988-1991. In 1990 he appeared in 29 games for the Reds, going 12-9 with a 3.42 ERA. A torn rotator cuff helped end his career at the age of 27. Armstrong was also a member of the inaugural Florida Marlins team in 1993.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings manufacturer's tag is sewn to the inside of the left tail, including washing instructions and the in-between size designation of "44". Pinch sewn on the right side of the tag is a tab marked SET 2 1990. The Rawlings manufacturer script logo is direct embroidered in red at the end of the right sleeve, just above the knit trim, correct for 1990.

Wear and Repairs: This jersey is clean and crisp and shows light signs of use. A light table evaluation shows that all lettering is original and without contrivance.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly lettered, tagged, and specially tailored. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was issued to Jack Armstrong of the Cincinnati Reds during the 1990 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Mariano Duncan 1991 Cincinnati Reds Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: October 23, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1023J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray pullover-style Rawlings-made home Cincinnati Reds jersey of infielder #7 Mariano Duncan. Size 42 tagged and measured. "CINCINNATI" tackle twill team crest in red over white arched across the chest. 1 3/4" Red/white/red sewn-in knit trim is at the end of each sleeve, and the V-neck is banded by red/white/red knit trim. The player number "7" is on front and back in the in red outlined with white, in the proper font as used by the Reds in 1991. Player name on back "DUNCAN" is in the correct, tall 4 1/4" red over white twill. Duncan is listed as 6' 0" and 185 lbs; examples of his jerseys that have appeared on other auction sites show that his jersey size increased from size 40-46 throughout his career; I believe that size 42 is reasonable for 1991, in the middle of his career.

During his twelve year career in MLB, 1985-1997 Duncan played for five teams, including the Reds, Phillies and Yankees. In 1991 with the Reds he appeared in 100 games and hit .258 with 12 home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings manufacturer's tag is sewn to the inside of the left tail, including washing instructions and the in-between size designation of "42". Pinch sewn on the right side of the tag is a tab marked SET 1 1991. The Rawlings manufacturer script logo is direct-embroidered in red at the end of the right sleeve, just above the knit trim, correct for 1991.

Wear and Repairs: This jersey is clean and shows signs of moderate use. The fabric and lettering are softened from repeated washings and the edges of the twill lettering are slightly frayed in spots. Some slight puckering off the lettering is noted. A light table evaluation shows that all lettering is original and without contrivance.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, sized and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriate evidence of use. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was issued to Mariano Duncan of the Cincinnati Reds during the 1991 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Deion Sanders 1997 Autographed Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: August 3, 2022 Certification Number: 22-08-3J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Russell size 44 (marked and measured) pro model six-button vest, white with red pinstripes. Two-color sewn twill Reds crest on the left chest, red over white. Player number 21 on front and back in the proper unique team font and correct placement, player name "D. Sanders" arched above on back, in the same red over white. The Jackie Robinson commemorative patch is properly stitched above the Reds crest the left chest, as worn only during the 1997 season. Sanders has signed the jersey on the back left, "Deion Sanders 21" in black marker. I have no professional opinion on the authenticity of the autograph. Sanders wore size 44 jerseys during this period.

During Sanders' first stint with the Reds 1994-1995, the team also had Reggie Sanders on its roster. In those years, the two players' jerseys were distinguished by adding their unique first initial to the jersey back. Notable is the wide white outline (likely hand cut) around the period following the first initial that is present on this jersey and other ones viewed in news photos. However- in 1997, even though both men were again on the roster, available reliably dated news photos as well as baseball cards show that Deion Sanders' jerseys that year simply said "Sanders" on back. I cannot claim conclusively that no "D. Sanders" jerseys were issued or worn in 1997, to do so would require an exhaustive search of local newspaper photos and archived game video footage.

Nicknamed "Prime Time" and "Neon Deion", he played in the National Football League (NFL) for 14 seasons with the Atlanta Falcons, San Francisco 49ers, Dallas Cowboys, Washington Redskins, and Baltimore Ravens. Sanders was also a baseball outfielder for nine seasons in Major League Baseball (MLB) with the New York Yankees, Atlanta Braves, Cincinnati Reds, and San Francisco Giants. He won two Super Bowl titles and made one World Series appearance in 1992, making him the only athlete to play in both a Super Bowl and a World Series (Wikipedia). In 1997 Sanders hit .273 in 465 at bats, playing in 115 games. (Baseball Almanac)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Diamond Collection locker tag in the correct style for 1997 is stitched to the outer left tail. There is no size tag in the neck, and pinched beneath on the bottom edge is a "100% Polyester" flag tab, both characteristic of team-issued jerseys. Also sewn and overlapped by the Russell tail tag is a rectangular, edge stitched "Property of the Cincinnati Reds 1997" mylar fabric tag with computer-printed black lettering. The Russell "R" logo mark is direct embroidered in red to the center of the back collar.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows very little use. The tagging is still crisp. All twill lettering is flat, crisp and unsoftened from washing, as is the Jackie patch on the chest. A light table examination shows that all stitched elements of this jersey are original and untampered with.

Conclusion: In my professional opinion, this is an authentic game jersey prepared by the Cincinnati Reds for the use of Deion Sanders. It is free of contrivance and has all of the proper characteristics of a team issued jersey.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Corey Lidle Game Worn 2004 Cincinnati Reds Home Jersey

Examination Date: December 8, 2020 Certification Number: 20-1217J13

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2004 Cincinnati Reds, size 48 six-button red pinstriped white vest-style jersey of pitcher Corey Lidle #15. Reds crest is sewn on the left chest in three color layered tackle twill, white, red, and black. All player lettering is sewn in the same three colors, red outline with white with a black 3-D drop shadow. #15 on the right front chest and on the back; LIDLE radially arched above, direct sewn. MLB Silhouetted batter patch sewn on the back of the neck, also in red-white-black. While the jersey is undated by the team, Lidle pitched for the Reds only in 2004, going 7-10 in 24 starts. Size 48 is reasonable for Lidle to have worn.

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: Russell locker tag on the tail is correct for 2004. There is no neck size tag, as correct with team-issue jerseys, instead there is a flag tag pinched and sewn underneath the locker tag on the front tail- "48 100% Polyester", Centered below the locker tag is a mylar fabric tag on which is printed "Property of Cincinnati Reds". There is no identifying Russell "R" embroidered on the jersey as is correct for 2004. That mark typically appeared on Russell-supplied undershirts instead.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows evidence of a full season's wear and wash, notably in the graying of the white twill elements, wash-puckering of the numbers, wrinkling/discoloration of the team inventory tag and major curling to the size flag tag. The outline edges of the twill lettering show signs of softening/fraying from washing.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Cory Lidle of the 2004 Cincinnati Reds.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

2012 Joey Votto Cincinnati Reds Road Game Jersey, Autographed

Examination Date: December 18, 2021 Certification Number: 211218J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Majestic six-button size 52 gray road-model Cincinnati Reds road jersey customized for Reds' first baseman Joey Votto. Gray jersey body with red/white/red 3/8" knit trim banding the sleeve ends. All lettering is three-color, layered red over white over a black drop shadow. "CINCINNATI" arched in the stylized team font on front; the player number 19 is below it on the left chest. On back, player name VOTTO is arched above the large number 19. The three-color embroidered Reds wishbone team patch is sewn to the left sleeve. The black/white/red MLB Silhouetted Batter patch is stitched to the center of the back of the neck. An exemplar survey of other authenticated game-used jerseys shows that size 52 was Votto's preference early in his career.

The numeral "1" on the back is signed in black Sharpie by the player, with the hand-written inscription "Game Used 2012". While I have no professional opinion on the autograph, it bears a serialized PSA/DNA sticker with the code AB66905 referencing the signature. There is no MLB hologram on this jersey, so it is not included in the MLB Authentication Program database.

The 2010 NL MVP, Votto was selected by fans to be a National League team starter for the 2012 All Star Game. At the time of his selection, he was hitting .350 with 14 HR and 47 RBI (Baseball Almanac) and leading the NL in walks, doubles, OBP and extra base hits. However, on July 16 he left went on the injured list, requiring knee surgery and missed the next seven weeks. He still finished the season with good stats, batting .337 in 111 games, though still with only 14 home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Majestic "M" logo is direct-embroidered to the end of the left sleeve. Majestic's locker tag correct for 2012 is stitched to the outside of the front left tail. A small flag tab is pinch-sewn below the center of the locker tag showing the size as 52. Stitched beneath the locker tag is a white Mylar fabric 1 1/2 x 2 1/2" square printed in black "Property of the Cincinnati Reds 2012". On the inside side seam of the jersey is another mylar-fabric flag tag that lists various style numbers and codes, and it shows that this jersey is made as style "0620" which is the designation for jerseys made to team specification and the ones that are issued to players on the field.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows signs of very light use, appearing to have been worn and washed perhaps once or twice. The tagging is mildly wrinkled and still presents as nearly new. A light table evaluation shows that all sewn elements are untampered with and are properly stitched without contrivance.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Its player inscription says it to be game worn. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and issued to Joey Votto of the Cincinnati Reds during the 2012 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 34

Colorado Rockies

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Rockies Uniform History Notes

- Added as an expansion team to the National League in 1993, the Rockies wanted a traditional look that could withstand the test of time.
- Using the Yankees as their model, the Rockies' first uniforms are simple. Home uniforms have classic pinstripes, albeit in a dark purple that looks almost navy or black from a distance. Road uniforms are gray with simple purple knit trim. Home uniforms have plain numbers on the back only, with no player names for a highly traditional look. Road uniforms have block numbers on the back only and add player names in deference to the National League gentleman's agreement requiring names on the back of road uniforms, enacted for the 1979 season.
- Black Sunday alternate jerseys are made up for the 1993 season as well, but were disliked by Don Baylor, the team's manager. These were rarely worn, then discontinued entirely after the first year.
- In its first year, the team uses a metallic-silver inlay in all its front wordmark lettering. This is removed from road jerseys after only one year but has remained on home jerseys and batting practice jerseys ever since.
- Names on back are added to home jerseys after the team's first year in 1993, after fans complained that they could not tell who the players were from the seats.
- By 2000, the team starts messing with everything except their home jersey and team colors, adding purple alternate jerseys, alternate pinstripe jerseys, gray pinstriped road jerseys, a pinstriped alternate vest, and then a black alternate vest a couple of years later. Nameplates are not used on pinstriped jerseys.
- For 2012, the Rockies drop their gray pinstriped road uniform replacing it with a solid gray design with purple knit trim.
- The Rockies are the very last team to host a "Turn Back the Clock" game, which occurs in April 2013. It remains the only TBTC game in franchise history.
- Surprisingly and perhaps admirably, even though they have made changes to details of their uniforms and tried a whole series of alternate ones, the Rockies have not changed their team identity (logos, colors) since their inception, a healthy span of 33 seasons through 2025. And aside from the addition of front numbers and player names, their home uniform is still the same as is was on day one. This is rather uncommon, but especially so for an expansion team.
- The Rockies change their shade of purple for 2017: adding more red and less blue for 2017 on their alternate jersey and batting practice jerseys, lightening it to appear less like blue and more bright purple in print and on television.
- In 2022, the Rockies unveil their first City Connect jersey. The design drew from Colorado's green-and-white license plates, featuring an evergreen jersey body, white lettering with purple accents, and a mountain motif on the sleeves. Black diamond skiing symbols and geographic coordinates of Coors Field added regional flavor, while the font used was sleek and contemporary. The uniform was worn for three seasons before being retired after the 2024 campaign.
- Their second City Connect uniform premiered in 2025, and embraced bold, modern aesthetics. The pullover is built on the Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, and features a split-color base of baby blue and lavender, with gradient mountains printed across the front and red-to-yellow sleeve accents representing the state's famous sunsets. Numbers included subtle printed rip-stop (i.e., grid) texture referencing mountaineering gear. The bold look is easily the most radical in franchise history, and quite a contrast when juxtaposed with the team's sedate standard uniform set.
- From 1993-2025, the Rockies, to their credit, have maintained one of baseball's most consistent visual identities. Despite numerous alternate experiments and two dramatically different City Connect uniforms, the core look—purple and silver on home pinstripes and solid gray with purple trim road jerseys—has endured for more than three decades. Their steady design and unchanged logos have helped establish them as one of the more visually stable franchises in the recent era.

I am always looking for new information and better photographs. If you can share new information, or offer corrections to this material, please send a note to me, at gamewornguides@gmail.com. Please tell me which page you are referencing. All contributors will be recognized by name in a future edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Year by Year Summary

1993

1993-1999

Style continues onward

1994-1999

Rockies Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front #	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1993	Home White	No	Block 2 color	No	-	Rockies Team Patch	Inaugural Year	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Rockies Team Patch	Inaugural Year	Russell
	Alt Black	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Rockies Team Patch	Inaugural Year	Russell
1994	Home White	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	MLB 125th Anniv	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Rockies Team Patch	MLB 125th Anniv	Russell
1995	Home White	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	Coors Field Patch	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
1996	Home White	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	MDM Memorial	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Rockies Team Patch	MDM Memorial	Russell
1997	Home White	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	Jackie Robinson	Russell
1998	Home White	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	All Star Game	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	All Star Game	Russell
1999	Home White	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	CHS Memorial	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	CHS Memorial	Russell

The Rockies have worn ten basic different game jersey styles over their short history, but they have kept their team identity consistent. Their pinstriped home jersey is identical in 2025 as it was on the team's first day, save for the addition of player names on back in 1994 and player numbers to the front in 2000.

* Worn after 4/20/99

 I have been told by a couple of Rockies collectors that the set of black alternate jerseys made for 1993 at first had no names on back, as they were intended to be used at home only. The team then decided they might be worn on the road as well, so player names were added. I do not have verification of any of this, and would comment that if names were added to the first set, all the numbers would have had to have been stripped off and moved lower for the names to fit. Evidence-wise, I have only ever turned up one photo of a team issued style (game used not proven) black jersey without a player NOB. In fact, these jerseys were worn very rarely and then dropped after 1993. The very few game photos I have showing the team wearing the black jerseys in 1993 all have evidence of player names on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2020

2000-2011

2000—2016

2001-2004

2005-2011

2005-2020

Rockies Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2000	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
2001	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Alternate Home “CR”	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
2002	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	10th Anniversary	Russell
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	10th Anniversary	Russell
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	10th Anniversary	Russell
	Alternate Home “CR”	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	10th Anniversary	Russell
2003	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Alternate Home “CR”	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
2004	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
	Alternate Home “CR”	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Russell
2005	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Home “CR” Vest	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2006	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Home “CR” Vest	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2007	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Home “CR” Vest	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2008	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Home “CR” Vest	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2009	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Home “CR” Vest	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2010	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	KSM memorial	Majestic
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	KSM memorial	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	KSM memorial	Majestic
	Alt Home “CR” Vest	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	KSM memorial (left chest)	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	KSM memorial 	Majestic
2011	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray Pinstripe	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Home “CR” Vest	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic

An alternate black vest with purple under-sleeves was listed in the 2004 MLB Style Guide, but was never worn by the team in 2004. See “oddballs” section.

 Alternate Purple jersey listed as an official choice for team but not seen on-field 2008-2010.

 Worn after April 21, 2010

© GameWornGuides.com

Rockies Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2012	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2013	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	20th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	20th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	20th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2014	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2015	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
Change to Flex Base 2016	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2017	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alternate Purple*	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2018	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	25th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	25th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	25th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	25th Anniv (right chest)	Majestic
2019	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	MLB 150th	Majestic
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	MLB 150th	Majestic
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	MLB 150th	Majestic
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	MLB 150th (right chest)	Majestic
2020	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Nike
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Nike
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Nike
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Nike

* It appears the black vest was not worn in 2013, though it is unclear if a set was issued to players. New shade of purple for 2017

2000-2020

2012-2020

2000—2016

2005-2023

2017-2025
(new shade of purple)

© GameWornGuides.com

These four styles continue from previous years

Switch to Vapor Premiere Elite

Rockies Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2021	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	2021 All-Star Game*	Nike
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	2021 All-Star Game*	Nike
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	2021 All-Star Game*	Nike
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	2021 All-Star Game* (left chest)	-	Nike
2022	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Nike
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Nike
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch	-	Nike
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 1 color	Custom 2 color	Block 1 color	No	Recolored CR patch	5280 patch	Nike
2023	Home White	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	30th Anniversary patch‡	-	Nike
	Road Solid Gray	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 2 color	No	30th Anniversary patch‡	-	Nike
	Alternate Purple	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	30th Anniversary patch‡	-	Nike
	Alt Black Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	-	-	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 1 color	Custom 2 color	Block 1 color	No	30th Anniversary patch‡	-	Nike
2024	Home White	Nike Block 2 color (no perf)	Nike Block 2 color (no perf)	Nike Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch‡	-	Nike
	Road Solid Gray	Nike Block 3 color (no perf)	Nike Block 3 color (no perf)	Nike Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch‡	-	Nike
	Alternate Purple	Nike Block 2 color (perf)	Nike Block 2 color (perf)	Nike Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch‡	-	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 1 color (perf)	Custom 2 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 color	No	5280 patch‡
2025	Home White	Nike Standard Block 2 color	Nike Standard Block 2 color	Nike Standard Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch‡	-	Nike
	Road Solid Gray	Nike Standard Block 3 color	Nike Standard Block 3 color	Nike Standard Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch‡	-	Nike
	Alternate Purple	Nike Standard Block 2 color	Nike Standard Block 2 color	Nike Standard Block 2 color	No	Rockies Team Patch‡	-	Nike
	City Connect 2.0	Custom 2 color	Custom 2 color	Block 1 color	No	“CO” Disc	-	Nike

* Starting April 23, 2021 after All-Star Game moved from Atlanta to Colorado.

‡ patch sleeve varies based on handedness of player

© GameWornGuides.com

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1993-2023 Home

Almost unheard of in this age of change for change's sake, the Rockies have kept the same style home jersey since their inception in 1993. Jerseys have dark purple pinstripes. The Rockies wordmark is a black outline font, outlined by white and with subtle metallic silver inserts in each letter. The Rockies wanted to create a classic look akin to the Yankees and started in 1993 without player names on back. But they acquiesced to popular demand of both players and fans and added names to the backs of all jerseys in 1994. They avoided the use of nameplates on their home pinstriped jerseys because they thought it looked bad to have white plates on pinstriped jerseys. Shown on this page are 1993-1999 series of home jerseys, all made by Russell, before the addition of front numbers in 2000. Name and numbers are two-color Block; black outlined with gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993-2023 Home, continued

Front numbers are added in 2000, the same year the small Silhouetted Batter patch is added to the back of the neck. Jerseys are full weight Russell knit 1993-2004, Majestic knit 2005-2007, Cool Base 2008-2015, Flex Base 2016-19, and Nike Flex Base 20020-2023. Note the change in style code from Majestic's DNHW to Nike's DN1W.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993 Road

Bill Henderson Collection

The first-year gray road jersey has open-outlined Rockies lettering with silver twill in the middle. Because it is a one-year-only style, all game worn examples should have the Inaugural Year patch on the sleeve, or have evidence that it had been there.

Purple knit trim on the placket. Knit three-striped trim on sleeve ends.

No numbers on front; two-color names and numbers on back all in Block style purple/white, nameplates used.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993 Alternate

Bill Henderson Collection

Button-front solid black fabric, nearly identical to the team's batting practice jersey at the time (which is a black mesh pullover with identical lettering). No numbers on front, all Block style lettering two-color, purple/gray (not white!). Names on nameplates.

It is reported that manager Don Baylor hated these alternate jerseys, and as a result, they were seldom worn. All game worn jerseys should have the Inaugural Year patch on the sleeve, or evidence that it had been there. These jerseys were worn very infrequently and then dropped after 1993. Black jerseys would not return until an alternate black vest was introduced in 2005.

Inconclusive, but noted here as an "FYI": I have been told by a couple of Rockies collectors that the set of black alternate jerseys made for 1993 at first had no names on back, as they were intended to be used at home only. The team then decided they might be worn on the road as well, so player names were added. Of the very few photos available online, we know that as early as April 25, the team is wearing these jerseys with two color Block numbers and names on back. At top, these 1993 photos show solid fabric Russell black jerseys (sleeve logo visible) without Inaugural patches and without NOB. The top one of Joe Girardi shows him wearing road pants, while Don Baylor in the bottom photo is identified as wearing his during spring training. Note that the numbers are Varsity font, not Block, and are three colors- Purple, gray, white! These may have been worn this way only in Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

1994-1999 Road

Rockies lettering on the front changes to a bolder purple, outlined with white, knit sleeve ends removed. Maybe the team thought the 1993 road jersey was too flashy with metallic silver inserts, or was the lettering too hard to see on TV or from the cheap seats? Narrow purple knit trim remains on the placket and is now added to the sleeve ends. No numbers on the front, two-color purple white Block name and number on back, nameplates used 1994-1996, not used 1997-1999.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2011 Road

Jersey changes to gray pinstripe fabric with Colorado on the front. Pinstripes are dark purple. On front and back, number is three-color, purple/black/white. The black is very hard to see unless you are very close. Name is two-color, purple/white. No nameplates used.

Made by Russell 2000-2004, Majestic 2005-2011.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2016 Alternate Purple

Bill Henderson Collection

Numbers used on the front, two-color black/white. Name and numbers on back are also two-color, black and white. No nameplate used. Rockies patch left sleeve.

The “official” MLB team style guide shows the purple alternate jersey as an official uniform choice for every year from 2000 through to 2025. However the team did not wear them on the field during 2008-2010.They made a surprise reappearance on the field in 2011, then have since remained in the rotation. I doubt that any were made for the team in those three years.

Made by Russell 2000-2004, Majestic 2005-2016.

In 2017, the team changed the shade of purple of this jersey, which is covered in more detail on the next page.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2023 Alternate Purple (New Shade)

The Rockies change the color of the cloth on their purple jerseys in 2017. They believed the old color looked like blue on TV, and wanted something more distinctive. Here you can see old compared to new. The night shot of the new purple (top right) probably reflects the desired look, but some have said that in the bright sun it looks pinkish (bottom left). All three action shots on this page are of the new shade, showing how different it can appear in varied light.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2023 Alternate Purple (New Shade), continued

2019

2022

Majestic makes these from 2017-2019, Nike takes over 2020-2023. Note the change in style code from Majestic's DNAP to Nike's DN3P.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2004 Alternate Home “CR”

Bill Henderson Collection

Introduced and used as a Sunday-home alternate exclusively, at least during its first year. Purple pinstriped knit fabric, numbers on the front left. Note the (correct) low placement of the front numbers on this style jersey and in these years only. Names are on the back of all home jerseys, sewn on with no nameplates used. Name and numbers are two-color, black outlined with gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2011 Alternate Home Vest

Bill Henderson Collection

- The vest replaces the alternate home “CR” sleeved jersey shown on the preceding page. Purple pinstripes.
- Note the change in the front number placement. It is now much higher up, centered on the CR logo on the left chest.
- The jersey is worn with a plain black undershirt. Notice there are no team patches on sleeves.
- Lettering is identical to the other white pinstriped jerseys: two-color name and numbers, black/gray. No nameplates used

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2023* Alternate Black Vest

2008

Bill Henderson Collection

The MLB Style Guide shows these worn with purple undershirts through 2016, but the team ended up wearing black undershirts after just a few uses of purple. White/purple/white knit trim around the armholes.

Front says “Colorado,” Majestic logo is sewn on the top of the left sleeve near the edge of the arm hole through 2019. Front and back numbers are Block style, three-color gray/purple/white. Name on back is also three-color, gray/purple/white.

Notice, no patches used on sleeves of the undershirt.

It appears that this style was not worn by the team in 2013, it is unclear if any were issued to players that year. Majestic makes these from 2005-2019. Nike takes over manufacture in 2020, and their logo appears on front right chest. The style is “unofficially retired” and not worn on-field after 2021, though it still appears as an official alternate in the MLB Style Guide through 2023 after which, it is officially discontinued. During its lifespan it is worn both at home and on the road.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2023* Alternate Black Vest, continued

2019

2020

Majestic makes these from 2017-2019, Nike takes over 2020-2023. Note the change in style code from Majestic's DNVB to Nike's DN3B.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2023 Road

For 2012, the road jersey loses its unique purple pinstripes, a feature since 2000. Pinstriped gray uniforms have always been a subject of debate among purists, the reasoning being that “gray” is used by the road team to fade into the background when playing in the home team’s park, and conversely pinstripes are an embellishment meant to make a uniform stand out.

The fact that the Rockies’ pinstripes were anti-traditional purple probably increased the emotion of the discussion in some quarters. The Rockies inaugural road jerseys had originally been solid gray with purple knit trim like this,1993-1999, but at that time, the front wordmark said “Rockies” instead of “Colorado."

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2023 Road, continued

Majestic makes these from 2012-2019, Nike takes over 2020-2023. Note the change in style code from Majestic's s to Nike's DN2G.

© GameWornGuides.com

Rockies Team Tagging

Jerseys tagged with simple size numbers like this are usually extras ordered for eventual mid- season use.

Rockies game jerseys sometimes lack any tagging at all, even in years when other players' jersey are tagged. I have come to this conclusion after looking at dozens of Rockies jerseys, and noting that many common player jerseys are completely untagged, though clearly "team issued" (IE- they have all the other little characteristics that are usually not found on jerseys for retail sale, such as the lack of a size tag in the neck and the small fabric tags sewn just beneath the jock tag on the front tail). This could also mean that "name" player jerseys have been tagged to make them look authentic when they are not. I note that there are a disproportionate number of tagged Todd Helton and Larry Walker jerseys from the 1990s in my photo archives. Does that make them "fakes?" No, but as always, buyer beware.

Oddly, the Rockies record player names, uniform numbers and jersey size as part of their typical jersey tagging system, but there are frequently no year designations on tags between 1994 and 2010.

(Jackie Robinson Day)

© GameWornGuides.com

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of prior years.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 City Connect

2022

The Rockies entry into City Connect represents the team's home state more than its home city. However, aside from omitting note of the team's "CR" logo in green/white on the left sleeve, the team very meticulously described their uniform as follows: "The jersey's design reflects a classic green-mountain Colorado license plate—snow-capped mountains and evergreen trees. The sleeves and pants are adorned with purple trim, as are the numbers on the back of the jersey, representing the row of purple seats at the club's stadium designating exactly one mile above sea level. The jersey's right sleeve salutes Denver's mile-high nickname with 5280 emblazoned on a yellow 'sticker'. Above lie two black diamonds, noting Double Black Diamond ski runs as a nod to Colorado's vibrant ski and snowboard community. Below are the coordinates of Coors Field, our home in the city of Denver. Above the jock tag, 'Welcome to Colorful Colorado' was inspired by an iconic sign welcoming visitors to the Centennial State." In 2023, the "CR" patch was replaced with the team's 30th anniversary patch and the yellow patch was removed. The style code on the jersey also changes from DNCC to 04CA.

2023

Above: The team's 30th anniversary patch replaced the "CR" patch in 2023, while the yellow patch was deleted, possibly in preparation for an ad patch that never materialized.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020-2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly - a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Home

Matthew Fast Collection

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Rockies longstanding home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the letters still split between the "C" and "K". The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Road

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Rockies road jersey, introduced back in 2012. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the knit trim around the neck and down the placket is closer together than before, and the second "O" in "COLORADO" now splits at a slightly different place. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in rather than sewn on, and the purple portion appears wider. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate

Matthew Fast Collection

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Rockies purple alternate. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the second "O" in "COLORADO" now splits at a slightly different place. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 City Connect

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Rockies license-plate inspired City Connect entry, introduced just two years prior. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the second "O" in "COLORADO" now splits at a slightly different place. The yellow ski-inspired sleeve patch returns for 2024, replacing the team's 2023 anniversary patch. It alternates sleeves depending on player handedness, while the opposite sleeve is left blank (the CR patch from 2022 never returns). Two more other small update that is not visible on the field, the "Welcome to Colorful Colorado" text above the tag is now heat-pressed rather than embroidered, and the style code changes for the third time in three years, now appearing as DNC1. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. It is retired at the end of the season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The jersey also features the new-for-2025 white Nike jock tag used on a handful of jerseys around MLB. The team adds an ad patch starting on July 1.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. The redundant, jersey-colored band of trim around the neck opening is also deleted. Back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. VPE’s placket remains narrow, so the “Colorado” lettering breaks in the same place as in 2024. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The team adds an ad patch starting on July 1.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The team adds an ad patch starting on July 1.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 City Connect 2.0

The Rockies enter City Connect 2.0 territory with another homage to their city, this time, its purple mountain majesty and not its green license plates. The main colors are baby blue, purple, red, and yellow, which the team says evokes mountains and sunset. This is the first City Connect pullover, and it is built on the VPE template. Like their last version, it is two-toned, with baby blue on top and purple on bottom. The team name appears in purple, rising from the purple portion of the jersey, overlaid by patch featuring a recolored version of the team's mountain and baseball logo. Sleeve trim is red, and neck trim is red/yellow/purple, and it follows the odd notch in the v-neck of the VPE pullover jersey. Front and back player numbers appear in yellow/pink, and have a printed "rip stop" pattern (essentially a grid) to represent the ruggedness of mountain climbing gear. Player names are in purple. The sleeve bears a circle patch, with a the same mountain graphic as the jersey front, this time in blue and purple, on a yellow sky with a red border. The state abbreviation "CO" appears in red/purple, with a yellow/purple baseball in the opening of the "O". Like other City Connect, it also features a few items that are visible only at retail, including a "DEN" patch above the jock tag (with the mountain graphic again) and a fabric flag sewn in to the right lower side hem of the jersey that reads: Baseball @Altitude in Denver Colorado 5,280'. The bright uniform set is a stark contrast to the team's sedate regular uniform set, and though their City Connect 1.0 was bold, it pales in comparison to this new version. The "Welcome to Colorful Colorado" message on the 1.0 would be more at home here than it was on that jersey. The team adds an ad patch starting on July 1.

© GameWornGuides.com

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1993-2002 Batting Practice

1994

1995-
1996

2000

1993 Spring Training

Majestic-made 1993-2000 mesh batting practice jersey has purple/gray Majestic Varsity Bold numbers on back, Russell-made ones have Block numbers.

Font changes to Block on all, 2000-2002.

No names on back at first, they appear in the late 1990s. However, the Rockies usually leave names off batting practice jerseys used in Spring Training, adding them to players' jerseys after the beginning of the regular season.

These look remarkably similar to the 1993 one-year alternate black game jersey, with the exception that these are mesh and pullovers.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993 Alternate Batting Practice/Spring Training

- Seldom worn – or at least seldom seen in photographs. The “CR” style was probably used in Spring Training 1993 and may have been sparingly used after that.
- Purple/silver “CR” cap logo sewn on front.
- One-color gray Varsity numbers and block style names on back. Baseball cards suggest that player versions of these jerseys lacked player names on back (as #30 above). Both Evans and Bearnarth were coaches, possibly explaining the presence of NOB on their jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993 Alternate Zip-Neck Batting Practice

Shown here are two styles of the Majestic Gamewarmer pullover with the zipper neck. These were likely issued in 1993 to players who wanted them. They did not see wide use, and photographs of players wearing them are practically non-existent. The “CR” version of the jersey features the Majestic rendition of the logo; taller and missing the bottom serif on the “C” as found on Russell’s version of the same logo.

These examples are unnumbered, as many teams issued them without any lettering on the back, as they would a team jacket. I would welcome any reader photographs of game used examples with back numbers/names.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2006 Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

2004 Spring Training

Made of softer, non-mesh, early Cool Base-type tech fabric. Jersey has purple bands around the shoulders.

Two-color lettering, purple with white outline, sewn on. These game worn examples shown have names on back...inset photo shows 2004 Spring Training, where no names are used on back. Batting practice jerseys in this style without names on back are likely Spring Training issue; those with names on back are from the regular season.

This was Majestic's first attempt at a breathable polyester fabric, and it did not hold up well in use. They were highly susceptible to fabric pulls and significant fading in the sun.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 Batting Practice

- The Rockies' 2007 version of the new Cool Base batting practice jersey has a one-button neck, and the same lettering style that has been used on the front since the team's inception in 1993.
- Side inserts are two-toned white and purple.
- Back numbers are gray outlined with purple.
- No player names on back, even during the regular season.
- All lettering and numbers are heat-applied designs, not sewn-on tackle twill any longer.
- Sleeve patch is eliminated.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Batting Practice

- All teams in MLB change to button-front batting practice jerseys for 2011, and the Rockies change includes an unusual two-toning treatment which features a purple yoke across the shoulders and the top of the back, similar in design to the Seattle Mariners' batting practice jersey.
- Solid purple side panels replace the earlier silver/purple design from 20072010.
- No player names on back, numbers are two-color gray/purple, returning to sewn twill numbers.
- No sleeve patch is used.
- Worn in a regular season game on June 22, 2013 vs. Washington

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Batting Practice

All teams in MLB receive new batting practice jerseys for 2014, and the Rockies make a major change, reverting to the team's alternate "CR" logo (as used on their caps) for the left chest in purple outlined with silver, last used by the team on BP jerseys in 1993.

No names on back, two-color silver/black block numbers on a solid purple jersey back. Side panels are purple as well.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the pre-season. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Rockies use their regular season purple alternate, here without name on back as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The back numbers are black patterned twill/white. Front numbers are the standard black/white. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Rockies spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The Rockies again use their regular season purple alternate, in the team’s new brighter shade of purple for 2017, and used here without name on back, as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The back numbers are white patterned twill. Front numbers are the standard black/white, as is used in the regular season. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing where the Rockies spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Rockies jersey is black with purple back and underarm gussets. The "CR" ligature from the team's caps appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in silver/purple/white on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts, in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Rockies use their regular-season purple alternate, here without name on back, as their base. The back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. Front numbers are the standard black/white, as is used in the regular season. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns.

The Rockies use their regular-season purple alternate, here without name on back, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "ARZ," referencing their Spring Training home. The front and back numbers are black/ white twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020, the Rockies use their regular-season purple alternate, with black/white front and back numbers and player name (names added for the first time on a BP or Spring Training jersey since 2006).

© GameWornGuides.com

Special Events Jerseys

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock (Road)

- Game was played at St. Louis, July 30, 1999.
- Odd three-color lettering on back, metallic silver, black, white. Note one-color white number on the front. This gamer at right is missing the first letter “R” from the player name for some reason. Lettering is tackle twill.
- Interestingly, two versions of the jersey were created and worn on the field. One with a black sky and purple sleeves (next page), one with a purple sky and white sleeves (this one). It is funny to me that the Rockies went to the trouble of designing and making two different sets of jerseys for this promotion.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock (Home)

Game was played against Atlanta, August 18, 1999.This is the home version of the Turn Ahead the Clock jersey, featuring purple sleeves and a black “sky” on the front.

Odd three-color lettering on back, metallic silver/purple/ white. Note one-color white number on the front, and the MLB logo on the undershirt’s left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Turn Back the Clock to 1993

April 16, 2013: The Rockies hosted a Turn Back the Clock game to celebrate their very first game, 20 years prior, April 5, 1993, at Shea Stadium in New York against the Mets. Notable in that this the very first nostalgia game for the Rockies.

Despite the Rockies being the home team and the Mets the road team, they reversed uniforms so that the home Rockies wore their 1993 road grays and the road Mets wore their 1993 home pinstripe throwbacks, simulating what the teams actually wore for that 1993 game. The Rockies throwbacks were flawlessly executed by Majestic, down to the inaugural patch on the right sleeve and nameplates used on the back. To this day, the game remains as the only Turn Back the Clock game in franchise history.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2013 Memorial Day

May 27, 2013 vs. Astros at Houston, gray road jerseys with a barely noticeable camo-centered "Colorado" wordmark, player numbers in hard-to-see camo/purple/white, player names in virtually impossible-to-see camo/white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2015 Memorial Day/Military Appreciation Day

2014

2015

These uniforms saw double duty in 2014 and 2015. In 2014, they were worn first on the road at Philadelphia for 2014 Memorial Day on May 26, and then again at home on July 6, the Rockies' Military Appreciation Day. The same goes for the 2015 entries, first on Memorial Day, May 25, then Military Appreciation Day on July 11. Both years' jerseys are identical in design, except for the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the collar, which is changed to dark green/khaki/white in 2015 rather than its typical team colors from 2014. The choice of the purple alternate uniform is perfect for the application of desert camouflage wordmark and player name/number, because the combination is actually visible to fans in the seats, unlike the uniforms worn by many other road teams, who on Memorial Day had the unfortunate and invisible combination of camouflage lettering on gray jerseys. It is likely different, authenticated sets of jerseys for were worn on each date each year, but certainly in 2015 that was the case.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Rockies wear their road gray jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars taking the place of the purple inner-layer of their front wordmark, surrounded by red. Front and back numbers are in the blue-background starred twill outlined in red. Player names on back are in red. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Mother's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Rockies wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally purple, becomes dark gray.

Right: Game worn jersey has pink ribbon patch on the chest.

Top left: #24 Lyles jersey lacks the ribbon and hologram so is likely a team pro-shop authentic.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Memorial Day/Military Appreciation Day

Like the two years prior, the Rockies wear their camouflage--style jerseys twice in 2016, first for Memorial Day on May 30, then on Military Appreciation Day on July 10. The 2016 jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold, as it does for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The three-color front lettering is reduced to two-color camo/black, front and back numbers are rendered in woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black. Similar to 2014-2015 Memorial Day and Military Appreciation Day, there were likely separate sets of jerseys issued for each game.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016 Father's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms Father's Day, Sunday, June 19. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The Rockies wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in light blue with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally purple, becomes dark gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Rockies are at home and wear their road jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Rockies select the blue twill version with red outlines for their front lettering and for their front and back numbers, with a red player name on back. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016, team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors, and all jersey trim, normally purple, becomes single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Mother's Day

Pink-trimmed Mother's Day jerseys return on May 13-14, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic heat applied vinyl locker tag and team inventory tag inside the bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon glued on left chest; the pink Majestic sleeve logo; and the dark pink/light pink/white ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter applique stitched on the back of the collar. All multi-colored lettering is done in the lightweight-twill style. The Rockies wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Memorial Day/Military Appreciation Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve. The Rockies apply this style to their home white jerseys as worn on May 27-29, 2017 and May 26-28, 2018. The Rockies also wore this same style on July 9, 2017 and July 15, 2018 for Military Appreciation games.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Father's Day

Light blue-trimmed Father's Day jerseys return on June 17-18, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic tagging and set tagging at the inside bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon glued on left chest, the light blue Majestic embroidered sleeve logo, and the dark royal blue/light blue/white back collar ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter patch. The Rockies wear home white with the front logo lettering in light blue/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill – appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1-2, 2017, the Rockies wear their road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill –appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 3-4, 2017, the Rockies wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25-27, 2017, the Rockies wear jerseys with gray bodies and purple sleeves with white nicknames and purple numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide purple/white/purple trim. The front features a straight-across version of their normally arched home lettering, here rendered in purple/white kiss-cut lightweight twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Independence Day

The 2018 Independence Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017 featuring printed twill with a pattern of stars and stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the lettering red/blue or blue/red, and the Rockies switch up their colors for 2018. The jerseys themselves are Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging, and a ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 2-4, 2018, the Rockies wear their home white jerseys with red patterned twill/blue front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year; a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly-colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24-26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The Rockies wear jerseys with black bodies and purple sleeves with white nicknames and purple numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide purple/white/purple trim. The front features a straight-across version of their normally arched home lettering, here rendered in purple/white kiss-cut twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23-25, 2019.

Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Rockies wear a black version of their road jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

Prototypes and Oddballs

2004 Unused Alternate Black Vest

This jersey design was included in the official 2004 MLB Style Guide but was never worn by the team. It is a black vest worn with a purple undershirt, or a black jersey with purple sleeves. Front says Colorado, no number on front.

It is highly probable that these jerseys were never actually made for the team, but a prototype example has indeed surfaced prior to the Ninth Edition. It is shown here.

It differs from the 2005-2023 alternate black vest only slightly in that there is no trim on the arm hole openings on the 2004 design, and there are no numbers on the front. Back number is Block style, three-color metallic silver/purple/white. Name on back is three-color, metallic silver/purple/white.

© GameWornGuides.com

Rockies Script Buttons

Bill Henderson Collection

How is this for an obsessive team detail? A collector friend asked me “Have you ever seen Rockies jerseys with branded buttons?” I told him he must be dreaming because I had never heard of such a thing. But unable to resist, I went through my own collection of Rockies game worn jerseys and -- lo and behold -- found one with these buttons sewn on it! When I say the writing is tiny you must believe me. It took me six tries to get a photo legible enough for print. These buttons have four holes, and would likely be found only on jerseys actually made for the team.

This particular jersey is from 2002. Matt Spector, friend and Rockies collector tells us, “When Russell Athletic was making the jerseys for the Rockies 1993-2004 all (team issued) home jerseys had these buttons. When the Rockies switched to Majestic in 2005, they did not use the fancy buttons any longer” (we have since found some team issued Russell jerseys without the special buttons, so we will amend Matt’s statement).

© GameWornGuides.com

1993-1994 Road Batting Practice/Spring Training

Bill Henderson Collection

This gray mesh uniform jersey was worn in 1993 and possibly 1994 during Spring Training, and was probably designated for use in split-squad games where the Rockies needed two colors of mesh jerseys to wear on the field simultaneously. Names on nameplates, numbers and names in purple over white twill. Front wordmark has a metallic silver center. Team sleeve patch is sewn on the left sleeve. These are heavy mesh, high quality jerseys that so far as we know were not sold as a retail item.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Aurora Tragedy Memorial

The Rockies hung this jersey in their dugout and sent this posting on Twitter following the mass shooting inside an Aurora, Colorado movie theater on July 20, 2012, which killed 12 and injured 70 others. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/2012_Aurora_theater_shooting

This is not the first time the Rockies have made note of a tragic shooting, having worn a sleeve patch all season in 1999 memorializing the Columbine High School shooting massacre. Related to this event, the team decided against wearing a memorial patch for the rest of the season.

2015 Unworn Coors Field 20 Years Patch

The Rockies were supposed to wear this patch on April 26, 2015, on the right sleeve of their home uniforms. The game was rained out, and the patch was not worn. They seem to be as rare as the proverbial hen's teeth.

© GameWornGuides.com

St. Patrick's Day Phantoms

Here we have two Rockies St. Patrick's Day jerseys that never saw the field.

Left: a green version of a Rockies batting practice jersey dating from 2007-2010, which despite "Authentic Collection" tagging, was not worn by the team.

Above: Though we see it on a player in the photo, the jersey in this image from 2018 St. Patrick's Day was a creation of the Rockies' art department, shared on Twitter as a fun way to celebrate the day. Despite what's shown here, the Rockies did wear green caps in the game.

© GameWornGuides.com

Commemorative Patches

Rockies Patches

1993

1995

1996

1998

1999, after April 20

2002

2010, after April 20

May 14, 2012

2013

- 1993: Inaugural Patch, worn on home, road and alternate jerseys
- 1995: Coors Field Inaugural patch, worn on home jersey only
- 1996: MDM Memorial, all season (for Michael D. McMorris, son of owner Jerry McMorris)
- 1998: All-Star Game
- 1999, after April 20: Columbine High School Memorial Patch, a small 1 ½" diameter borderless disk with CHS in the middle, worn on home and road uniforms
- 2002: 10 Year Anniversary Season patch
- 2010, after April 20: Following the death of Colorado Rockies' president, Keli McGregor, the team started wearing a patch with his initials ("KSM") in silver on a black disc on their road gray and black uniforms, and on a purple disc on the white jerseys
- 2012, May 14: Red AIDS ribbon for "Until There's a Cure" Day at San Francisco
- 2013: 20th Anniversary patch

© GameWornGuides.com

Rockies Patches Continued

2018

- 2018: Rockies 25 years patch, right sleeve on white, gray, and purple jerseys, right chest on black vest.
- 2021, starting April 23: 2021 All-Star Game patch, added when the game was moved to Colorado from Atlanta in reaction to Georgia legislature passing an election law that opponents said disproportionately disenfranchised people of color. Patch worn left sleeve on white, gray, and purple jerseys, left chest on black vest.
- 2023: 30th Anniversary Patch, replacing the standard team logo patch on each jersey
- 2024, April 27-28: Heat-pressed T Mobile sponsor patch (left sleeve) and embroidered MLB World Tour Mexico City Series patch (right sleeve) for games in Mexico vs. Rockies

Starting April 23, 2021

2023

April 27-28, 2024

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Rockies Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Rockies struck a sponsor patch deal with York Space Systems, an aerospace company. The patches first appeared on July 1, 2025. The patch is a black rectangle with the York Space Systems logo in white for Rockies jerseys. The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch.

In 2023, the location of the team's 30th Anniversary patch (which replaced the team logo patch for the season) varied depending on the handedness of each player, as did the team patch on its return in 2024, perhaps in preparation for a sponsor that did not materialize until halfway through 2025.

© GameWornGuides.com

Rockies Postseason Patches

2007 World Series
(right sleeve, left chest on vest)

2017 NL Wild Card
(right sleeve)

2018 NL Wild Card
2018 NL Division Series
(right sleeve, above anniversary patch)

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Andres Galarraga Colorado Rockies Autographed 1995 Road Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: December 29, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1229J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray six-button-front size 50 (marked and measured) Colorado Rockies jersey lettered for #14 Andres Galarraga. ROCKIES in purple outlined by white arched across both panels of the front. Narrow purple knit trim rings the placket and both sleeve ends about an inch from the sleeve ends. Four-hole gray pearl buttons. Team sleeve patch sewn on the left sleeve. There is no patch on the right sleeve. Name and back and player number are both in two-color layered twill, purple over white. The name is stitched to a perfectly matching knit plate that has a single-needle serged edge. The player name font is the slightly condensed version used for players with long names. Size 50 matches other jerseys worn by the player at their stage of his career in our exemplar database. The jersey is autographed on the upper front left in black marker with the player's name and the inscription "14 Big Cat". I have no professional opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.

In 1995, Galarraga played in 143 games for the Rockies and hit .280 with 31 home runs. He enjoyed a 19 year career with seven teams, and was the NL batting champion in 1993 with the Rockies. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is stitched to the outside left tail in the style most often seen in 1995-1997. There is a small white tag stitched pinch-sewn under the bottom seam of the locker tag noting "100% Polyester" The presence of this tag and the lack of a size tag in the neck are the only indications that this is a team issued jersey; the Rockies did not team tag jerseys in this style/years of use. Size 50 is an in-between size generally made for the team only and not made for retail sale. The locker tag style and the fact that the jersey has a sewn nameplate and no memorial sleeve patch on its right sleeve isolate its possible year of issue/use to 1995. In all years that this style of jersey was used, with a nameplate (1994-1996) 1995 was the only year without a memorial patch on the sleeve.

Wear & Repairs: Jersey: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering, and stitching on the jersey is unaltered and free of contrivance. There is a notable snag in the jersey fabric on the back to the left of the bottom of the player number. Otherwise, it shows very light wear, with little to no puckering of the twill lettering, There are no signs of any repairs.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is the correct size and is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue to Andreas Galarraga of the Colorado Rockies during the 1995 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Livan Hernandez 2008 Colorado Rockies Black Vest Game Jersey

Examination Date: December 6, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1206J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Colorado Rockies six-button black vest jersey, size 56 marked and measured. While he is listed at 6; 2" and 245 lbs, Hernandez preferred a very large jersey and the size matches others that have been offered at auction attributed to him. Black Cook-Base jersey body with three color COLORADO logo arched on front in purple/sparkle silver and white. Player number 61 beneath and on the back, name on back HERNANDEZ arched above, all in three colored layered twill, Pro Silver over purple over white. White/purple/white knit trim bands the armhole openings. This jersey was presented without provenance.

In a 17 year career that started spectacularly in 1996 with the Marlins, Hernandez bounced to many teams after his first three years of service. He split time in 2008 between the Twins and Rockies after the Twins released him mid-season and Rockies claimed him off of waivers in August. He appeared in just eight games for the Rockies in 2008.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rockies jersey from this period were not tagged in any way by the team. Heat-pressed Majestic Authentic Collection label is applied to the lower left outer tail, indicating the size as 56. On the inside side seam there is a white paper style tag that designates the jersey as style number #0063, a code reserved for jerseys made for team issue vs. retail sale. Additionally, size 56 jerseys were not generally offered as a retail item; they were reserved for team-issue. Majestic triple peaks logo is direct embroidered in white on top of the left shoulder. MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in purple/white/black is stitched to the back of the neck.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows wash wear, with wrinkled tags inside and puckering and minor edge fraying to the three-color lettering on back. The Rockies had a choice of five game jerseys to wear in 2008, and with Hernandez joining the team in the final two months of the season, it is reasonable that any given jersey in his set would show light use. There is no damage to the jersey nor signs of repairs. The player lettering is original and unaltered.

Conclusion: The jersey in review matches exemplars for a game worn 2008 Rockies jersey, shows evidence of use and is a reasonable size for the player. There are no apparent alterations or contrivances. It is my considered opinion that this jersey is a genuine game jersey prepared for and used by Livian Hernandez during the 2008 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 35

Kansas City Royals

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970- 2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Royals Uniform History Notes

- When the Kansas City Athletics left town for Oakland following the 1967 season, Kansas City was once again left without an MLB franchise. Happily and quickly, they were awarded an expansion franchise for the 1969 season.
- The Royals adopted a classically simple "Dodgers-like" home jersey script in royal blue with an absolute minimum of trim and ornamentation. The Royals crown and shield logo was designed by locally headquartered Hallmark Cards, notable because this logo was used through 2002 without alteration, and the current version is still very close to the original.
- Royals' inaugural road uniforms featured a script "Kansas City" that closely resembled the 1961 road uniforms of the departed Kansas City Athletics. They are still made of gray flannel but changed their wordmark design in 1971-1972, replacing the "Kansas City" script with the same words in new arched block lettering.
- Coinciding with the opening of their brand new stadium, double knits are introduced for the 1973 season, a year later than most teams. Both home and road uniforms become pullovers. Both jerseys gain wide blue and white striped knit sleeve-end trim, and thinner trim around the V-neck. Road jerseys keep the arched "Kansas City" in block writing, but change from old fashioned gray fabric to 1970s trendy powder blue.
- Pullovers continue to be used through 1982. For 1983, button fronts return. Numbers are added on the fronts of both home and away jerseys. The home jersey does not change its appearance, but the road jersey adopts the "Royals" script, just like the home jersey. The team becomes the last road powder blue holdout in baseball, wearing it through the 1991 season, before returning to gray roads in 1992 for the first time since 1972.
- 1992 sees the return of gray for the road jersey color. 1994 introduces an alternate royal blue jersey.
- For 1995, the road jersey switches back to "Kansas City" in arched lettering similar to 1972 and the trim on all three jerseys is simplified greatly. These styles continue through 2001.
- In 2002, unfortunate fiddling begins with a vengeance. The home jersey lettering picks up a black drop shadow (the new thing among many teams for the 2000s), as does the road jersey, which also loses its sleeves to become a vest. Following a sweeping trend, the Royals introduce an alternate black home jersey to go with the alternate blue one.
- After only one year, in 2003, the home jersey also loses it sleeves. Both home and road jerseys are now vests and remain so through 2005.
- Everything is changed in 2006. Sleeves are back on all jerseys, the road jersey says "Kansas City" in very 1970-like script, and the black alternate jersey is announced as a road jersey with the same "Kansas City" script. That black jersey is worn only one series early in the season, and then disappears forever.
- A retro-like Columbia blue alternate jersey takes the place of the departed black jersey in 2008.
- For 2012, the script on the road jersey changes yet again, and the lettering on the light blue jersey changes from blue to white. The color of this jersey changes slightly too, now called "Atlantic blue."
- A "Los Reales" Hispanic Heritage jersey is added officially in 2016, and a home alternate incorporated metallic gold twill arrives in 2017, based on the popularity of a similar gold-trimmed jersey the team wore to celebrate their 2015 World Series victory.
- In 2022, the Royals update both their primary road and alternate road jerseys, evoking the design of their original 1971–1972 gray set, including a faithful recreation of the front block vertically arched "Kansas City" lettering on both. The gray road jersey includes wide royal blue sleeve-end trim and matching single-color blue lettering and numbers, while the dark blue alternate version reverses the palette with white lettering and trim.
- In 2022, City Connect uniforms make their appearance. Jerseys are navy blue with powder blue accents, inspired by the city's nickname, "City of Fountains." The design incorporates elements like a stylized "KC" logo resembling cascading water, reminiscent of the city's iconic fountains, and triple braiding on the sleeves, a nod to the team's 1980s uniforms. The new number styling on the jersey is a reference to the city's art deco architecture. Jerseys are paired with white pants, forgoing the mono look.
- The Royals have participated in an impressive 37 Negro Leagues tribute games—more than any other MLB team—honoring the Kansas City Monarchs. Fittingly, they played in the very first tribute game in 1994, a nod to the city's deep connection to Black baseball history and the presence of the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum, which has been based in Kansas City since its founding in 1991.
- Player names are usually sewn in vertical arch style during the 1980s through 1992; while dated news photos indicate that vertical arch is the standard, a few slipped in using radial arch, Block-style names.
- While this sounds like a lot of change, truly the design theme of this club has remained almost unnoticeably changed since the team's birth. The home jersey, the team script and the team colors are still the same as on day one.

I am always looking for new information and better photographs. If you can share new information, or offer corrections to this material, please send a note to me, at gameworngguides@gmail.com. Please tell me which page you are referencing. All contributors will be recognized by name in a future edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Year by Year Summary

Style continues

Royals Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1969	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	MLB Centennial	-	Wilson/Rawlings
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	MLB Centennial	-	Wilson/Rawlings
1970	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson/Rawlings
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson/Rawlings
1971	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1972	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1973	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1974	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1975	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1976	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1977	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1978	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1979	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1980	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1981	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1982	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	No	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1983	Home White	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1984	Home White	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1985	Home White	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1986	Home White	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Wilson
1987	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Wilson Special vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	10 Howser Memorial	Rawlings
	Road Lt Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	10 Howser Memorial	Rawlings
1988	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
	Road Lt Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
1989	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
	Road Lt Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
1990	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
	Road Lt Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
1991	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
	Road Lt Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block Bold w/ serifs 1 color	Rawlings Block Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	-	Rawlings

*After July 3, 1987

© GameWornGuides.com

All three of these jerseys worn 1995-2001

Royals Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1992	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Std. Vertical Arch 1 color	No	Team Disc	JRB Memorial	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block Std. Vertical Arch 2 color	No	Team Disc	JRB Memorial	Russell
1993	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Disc/EMK Mem	Royals 25th Anniv	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Bock 2 color	No	Team Disc/EMK Mem	Royals 25th Anniv	Russell
1994	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	No	Team Disc	MLB 125th Anniv	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Disc	MLB 125th Anniv	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Disc	MLB 125th Anniv	Russell
1995	Home White	Front Block w/Serifs bold 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	MIK Memorial	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Team Disc	MIK Memorial	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	MIK Memorial	Russell
1996	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
1997	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Team Disc	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	Jackie Robinson	Russell
1998	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
1999	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
2000	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
2001	Home White	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	AL 100th Ann.	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block w/Serifs 2 color	Block 2 color	Yes	Team Disc	AL 100th Ann.	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Front Block/Serifs 1 color	Block w/Serifs Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell

a JRB Memorial added after May 12, 1992

b EMK Memorial added after August 1, 1993

* I have seen 1987 jerseys lettered with Varsity Bold and others with the special Royals front bold number font.

 There many Royals jerseys in the hobby pre-1993 lettered with radial arched block names, Vertical Arch was the standard, and SOME mid-season call-ups were originally lettered with Block Standard. However, the Royals routinely stripped player names from jerseys after their service in the Majors was done. Most of these jerseys that today wear Standard Block names are improperly restored. Additionally, the Royals routinely re-used jerseys. A home jersey tagged "1981" may have a name and number, while another tagged 1981 has no name, nor any space for one. Quite possibly, the 1981 jersey with name and number was stripped after 1981, then re-lettered and reused in a later year. However, the year tag still says 1981.

 This may have been a changeover year from Wilson to Rawlings, both brands may have been used in that year as old stock was used up. The Royals are a frugal organization that wastes nothing.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002 only

2003-2005

2006 only

2008-2011

This style continues onward

This style continues onward

Royals Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2002	Home White	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Russell
	Road Gray vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Russell
	Alternate Black	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Russell
2003	Home White vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Russell
	Road Gray vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Russell
	Alternate Black	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Russell
2004	Home White vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Russell
	Road Gray vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Russell
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Russell
	Alternate Black	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Russell
2005	Home White Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Road Gray Vest	Front Block #2, 3 color	Block 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alternate Black	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Disc (New Style)	-	Majestic
2006	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Shield*	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Shield*	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Shield*	-	Majestic
	Alt Black Road	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Shield*	-	Majestic
2007	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Shield*	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Shield*	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Shield*	-	Majestic
2008	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
2009	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	40 Years	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	40 Years	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	40 Years	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	40 Years	Majestic
2010	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	Yes	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
2011	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	Splittorff mem. 	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	Splittorff mem. 	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	Splittorff mem. 	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	Splittorff mem. 	Majestic

* The sleeve patch in these years has a 1/4" white border. After this the patch loses its white border.
 Worn starting May 25

© GameWornGuides.com

Royals Game Jerseys

2006-2020

2006-2013

2012-2020

2012-2020

Change to Flex Base

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2012	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	All-Star Game	Majestic
	Road Gray (changed)	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	All-Star Game	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	All-Star Game	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue (changed)	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	All-Star Game	Majestic
2013	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue	Dodgers Font 1 color	Block XBold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
2014	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue/ Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
2015	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alternate Blue/Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Majestic
2016	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	2015 WS Champs	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	2015 WS Champs	Majestic
	Alternate Blue/Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	2015 WS Champs	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	2015 WS Champs	Majestic
	Alt Home Hispanic	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	2015 WS Champs	Majestic
2017	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	"ACE 30" Patch for Ventura	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	"ACE 30" Patch for Ventura	Majestic
	Alternate White/Gold	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	"ACE 30" Patch for Ventura	Majestic
	Alternate Blue/Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	"ACE 30" Patch for Ventura	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	"ACE 30" Patch for Ventura	Majestic
	Alt Home Hispanic	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	"ACE 30" Patch for Ventura	Majestic
2018	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	50th Season	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	50th Season	Majestic
	Alternate White/Gold	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	50th Season	Majestic
	Alternate Blue/Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	50th Season	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	50th Season	Majestic
	Alt Home Hispanic	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	50th Season	Majestic
2019	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alternate White/Gold	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alternate Blue/Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alt Home Hispanic	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
2020	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	David Glass memorial	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	David Glass memorial	Nike
	Alternate White/Gold	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	David Glass memorial	Nike
	Alternate Blue/Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	David Glass memorial	Nike
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	David Glass memorial	Nike
	Alt Home Hispanic	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	David Glass memorial	Nike

2014-2020

2016-2020

2017-2020

In 2019, the black drop shadow on the "KC" logo of the sleeve patch disappears.

© GameWornGuides.com

These six styles continue from previous years

Switch to Vapor Premiere Elite

Royals Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2021	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Nike
	Alternate White/Gold	Front Block #2, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Nike
	Alternate Blue/Road KC	-	Block 2 color	Block Cond 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Nike
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	-	Nike
	Alt Home Hispanic	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	-	Nike
2022	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield	Art Stewart memorial	Nike
	Road Gray "Kansas City" Block	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	No	Team Shield	Art Stewart memorial	Nike
	Alt Blue/Road "Kansas City"	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	No	Team Shield	Art Stewart memorial	Nike
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #1, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 2 color	No	Team Shield	Art Stewart memorial	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 1 color	Custom 1 color	Custom 1 color	No	-	"R" Crown patch	Nike
2023	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	-	Nike
	Road Gray "Kansas City" Block	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	-	Nike
	Alt Blue/Road "Kansas City"	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	-	Nike
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	-	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 1 color	Custom 1 color	Custom 1 color	No	"R" Crown patch‡	-	Nike
2024	Home White	Nike Block 1 color (no perf)	Nike Block 1 color (no perf)	Nike Block 1 color^	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	Road Gray "Kansas City" Block	Nike Block 1 color (no perf)	Nike Block 1 color (no perf)	Nike Block 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	Alt Blue/Road "Kansas City"	Nike Block 1 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 color^	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	Alt Light Blue	Nike Block 1 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 color^	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 1 color (perf)	Custom 1 color (perf)	Custom 1 color	No	"R" Crown patch‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
2025	Home White	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	Road Gray "Kansas City" Block	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	Alt Blue/Road "Kansas City"	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block Cond 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	Alt Light Blue	Front Block #2, 1 color	Block Bold 1 color	Block 1 color	No	Team Shield‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 1 color (perf)	Custom 1 color (perf)	Custom 1 color	No	"R" Crown patch‡	QT Ad patch‡	Nike

‡ patch sleeve varies based on handedness of player

^ In 2024 Spring Training only, these jerseys retained the larger NOB size. By the start of the season, it was changed to the smaller Nike Block.

© GameWornGuides.com

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1969-1972 Home

As an expansion team in 1969, the Royals' inaugural home flannel uniforms are the model of classic simplicity. Button-front cream-colored flannel with a Dodgers-inspired front script in royal blue, Varsity style single-color numbers on the back only, and blue knit trim at the neck and sleeve ends.

This classic home jersey design has survived with only minor modifications through the next 56 years! Left sleeve has MLB 100th Anniversary patch in 1969, is blank in 1970, then adds the classic Royals disk patch for 1971, a logo patch unchanged through 2001.

The Royals are one of the few teams that were still using flannels in 1972, as most MLB teams had switched to knits by this time.

© GameWornGuides.com

1969-1970 Road

The 1969-1970 gray flannel road jersey was the Royals' first; 1969 was the first year for the expansion Royals in the American League. Classic simplicity: gray fabric, one-color (blue) city name script with underline, simple sleeve end and neck trim, one-color Varsity numbers on back only, and the classic Royals sleeve patch that remained in use until 2001, 31 years later.

Both Wilson and Rawlings supply the team in 1969-1970.

In 1969, the left sleeve had the MLB 100th Anniversary patch. While I have found photos of the 1970 being worn without a sleeve patch and the Hall of Fame "Dressed to the Nines" database shows the 1970 jersey with a bare left sleeve, I have concluded that the patch was not worn in Spring Training and then added for the regular season.

Above: Plain-sleeved photo on this 1970 Topps card is from 1969 Spring Training*

Below: This photo is probably from 1971 Spring Training, wearing a 1970 jersey, as was the custom then.*

Below: The Royals' jersey looks very similar to the 1961 Kansas City Athletics road uniform, shown for comparison*

© GameWornGuides.com

1971-1972 Road

Ryan Magathan Collection

After only two years of the "Kansas City" script that had closely resembled the 1961 Athletics road jerseys, the Royals switch to this understated, vertically arched wordmark for 1971. Jersey fabric remains a light-blue hued gray flannel.

Varsity numbers in one-color royal blue remain on back. Very simple trim continues as before, as does the Royals' disc patch on the left sleeve. Flannels continue through 1972, a year longer than most MLB teams.

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1982 Home

1983

Wilson makes these jerseys through the 10-year run of the style. White knit pullover with blue Royals script, wide knit elastic sleeve end trim. There are no numbers on the front of the pullover jerseys. The back numbers are Varsity Standard. No player names on back 1973-1977. Player names appear in 1978, sewn directly to the jersey. Hand drawn bold vertical arch is standard, but many are seen today with non-vertical-arched names. The Royals routinely stripped player names off, letter by letter, before sending them to the minor leagues. While some may have been this way originally, as in mid-season call-ups or trade acquisitions, most of these jerseys have today been incorrectly restored with non-vertical arch NOB.

1974

1982

Ryan Magathan Collection

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1982 Road

1975

Ryan Magathan Collection

1975

Wilson-made; arched white Kansas City on light blue pullover jersey. No names on back 1973-1977, player names appear on back in 1978. Vertical arch was the standard style, in a special Royals variant shown here, each name hand drawn by a Wilson artist on a drafting board. Some originals may have been sewn with non-vertical-arched names, but most have been restored that way incorrectly.

1981

Below: Note extra-wide NOB.

© GameWornGuides.com

1983-1985 Home

Jersey style changes to a white seven-button front, with royal blue Royals script. 1983-1985 jersey has wide knit sleeve trim (top left, red circle). One-color, royal blue Varsity numbers added on front left in 1983. Names on back are used on all button-front white jerseys. Painstakingly hand-drafted vertical arched names are standard; though a non-vertical arch sneaks in now and again on a mid-season call-up or trade acquisition, and because the Royals religiously stripped player names from jerseys before sending them to the minors or selling them off, many have been incorrectly restored with non-vertical-arched names. Left: It is very likely that the Leibrandt example is an accurate restoration.

Left: This unrestored #32 jersey is missing its NOB, common with Royals gamers. Notice the low placement of the number since name was above. Very few of this series of jerseys escaped having their names on back stripped, one letter at a time, before being sent to the minors.

© GameWornGuides.com

1983-1985 Road

1984

1983

(7-button, wide sleeve trim)

Brian Bates Collection

Light blue seven-button front, white Royals script. Wilson-made. White Royals' front Varsity numbers on front left, and on the back. 1983-1985 knit sleeve end trim is thick and wide. One-color, white Varsity numbers added on front left in 1983. Painstakingly hand-drafted vertical arched names are standard. Names are stripped of nearly all jerseys after MLB use by the team, and many have been restored incorrectly with non-vertical arch names over the years.

1983

© GameWornGuides.com

1983-1985 Road, continued

1983

This sloppily lettered jersey with a crooked and non-vertical-arched NOB for a Hall of Fame player must be a fake... right? Not so fast! Read the letter linked above for the real story...

1984

Jason Gudvi Collection

1985

© GameWornGuides.com

1986 Home

In 1986, the Royals made a small refinement to their home jersey: the sleeve-end trim was reduced to half its previous width. The jersey featured seven front placket buttons for the final time. The familiar Wilson Varsity number font was used on both the front and back, while player names remained in the same vertically arched bold, hand-drawn style introduced in 1978. The team disc logo continued to appear on the left sleeve, a consistent detail since 1971.

From our experience, all jerseys were stripped of their player names at the end of the season and sent to the minor leagues. Top left: The jersey is likely a correct restoration, as the name appears to be a slightly different color than the numbers. Bottom left: The jersey is tempting to be called an incorrect restoration since the name on the back is not vertically arched, But a little research shows that David Cone's first year in the majors was 1986 when he made a brief June appearance on the Royals roster and then returned again in September. What generally happened with mid-season call ups or acquisitions was that their jerseys were lettered locally in Kansas City instead of at the Wilson factory. It's very likely that Cone's name was added in the clubhouse from a bin of stock letters.

© GameWornGuides.com

1986 Road

For 1986 the sleeve end trim narrows to half the previous size. Jerseys have seven buttons for the last time. Wilson continues as the team's supplier in 1986. Jerseys continue using the Wilson number fonts and the Wilson name on back in hand-drawn vertical arch format. No nameplates are used. Bottom left: Typical of how these were used in the minors with NOB removed.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-1994 Home

Uncommon style Rawlings tag is rarely seen, only on 1987 Rawlings issues.

1987

1987 sees Rawlings named as the official uniform supplier to MLB, and the Royals make the switch; Rawlings becomes the team uniform supplier 1987-1991. The Rawlings brand script appears on the right sleeve of Royals jerseys starting in 1987, and close inspection shows that Rawlings substitutes their own name and number fonts. Switch to six buttons. The Royals now use their own variant of the Block with Serifs (Full Block) font, and also use their own version of the vertical arch player names on back, including making some names either extra narrow and extra wide as seen here.

1988

Six buttons, Narrower sleeve trim new for 1986

1987

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-1994 Home, continued

1990

Eric Rosekranz collection

1992

1993

1994

Russell replaces Rawlings as MLB's official uniform supplier for the 1992 season, and the Royals make the switch. The only visible effect of the 1992 change is that the Russell "R" logo replaces the Rawlings script on the right sleeve. Russell continues to use the same name and number fonts as Rawlings had. Unique to the Royals, vertical arched names are sometimes made extra wide or even wide and bolder to suit shorter names. Names are always direct-sewn without nameplates. Starting 1993, player names are no longer vertical arched. In 1993 the team's 25th Anniversary patch is added to the right sleeve. All else remains constant 1993-1994.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-1991 Road

1991

Michael Getman Collection

1990

1990

Rawlings takes over for 1987-1991, substituting their fonts for player name and number. Change to six buttons. Names are still vertical arched but they use the Rawlings template that has taller, narrower lettering. When this style jersey disappeared after the close of the 1991 season, the very last of the baby blue jerseys was gone from the double-knit era.

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1991 Royals Team Tagging

Early-style Wilson tagging found in the collar, moves to the shirt tail by the mid 1980s. Wilson tagging is embroidered on jersey fabric squares and sewn on.

Rawlings uses their own style of white flag tagging, found on the shirt tail.

Above left: Rawlings tag is the common one. Above right: Seen quite sparingly, on 1987 jerseys only.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-1994 Road

Russell takes over making the Royals uniforms for the 1992 season. The road jersey body color changes from powder blue to traditional gray. Knit sleeve trim is blue/white/blue. Royals script is two-color, blue with white outline. Player name and numbers follow suit. Block with Serifs number font is now used on the back. Front Block with Serifs is used on the front. Names continue to be sewn directly to the jersey.

Above and below: Vertical arched player names are used in 1992 only. The only images we could find of these were screen grabs off YouTube, so thoroughly did the Royals strip names from jerseys after the season ended. All examples in our files are without NOBs.

Vertical arch NOB is used one final year in 1992, and then Standard radial-arched names begin for 1993. 25th Anniversary Royals patch is on the right sleeve for the 1993 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

Royals 1978-1992: Mid Season Call-ups vs. Incorrectly Restored Names on Back

Because the Royals routinely stripped their team jerseys of player names at the end of each season to prepare them to be sent to the minors, we have learned that a great percentage of the ones in the hobby with names intact have had their NOBs restored, many incorrectly with non-vertically arched lettering. But there were exceptions! Mid-season call-ups or acquisitions often got jerseys lettered from a local shop without the benefit of the fancy arched names that were created by draftsmen at Wilson and Rawlings. For example, both of these Bo Jackson jerseys have been photo matched to game photos from his September 1986 call-up. The blue jersey is shown when it had been on display at Kaufman Stadium.

Bottom left, below: These jerseys have had their names restored using “stock fonts” replacing what was surely a vertical arch name. Right: Close examination of this unrestored jersey clearly shows the outline of the removed PRYOR vertically arched NOB.

© GameWornGuides.com

1994 Alternate

In 1994, the team introduces a royal blue alternate jersey. Notice the white/blue/white sleeve-end and collar trim. This style with the trim would only last one year before it is changed for 1995.

This jersey, like many others we have observed of this style, is missing its front numbers. They may have been sent to the minor leagues where they were used without front numbers.

One-color white Royals script lettering, name, and numbers. Name directly sewn with no vertical arch. Back numbers are Block Bold with Serifs, on front, Front Block with Serifs Bold. As this particular style was worn only in 1994, all game worn jerseys should have the one-year MLB 125th patch sewn on the right sleeve (or evidence that it was there at one time). Oddly, many of these found for sale are without front numbers. Were they worn part of the season without them? Or is this perhaps an artifact of use in the minors after their big-league service was through?

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-2001 Home

Ryan Magathan Collection

2001

1996

2001

2001

White button front, blue Royals script. 1995-2001 jersey has no collar trim and very simple knit sleeve trim. Royals team disc patch remains unchanged - it is the same one used since 1969.

1997

Numbers are Block Bold with Serifs on the back. On the front they use Front Block with Serifs. Name on back sewn on nameplates; Team uses Block Condensed and Block Extra Condensed lettering for names, seemingly on home jerseys only. Road jerseys use same font no matter the name length.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-2001 Road

Bill Henderson Collection

1996

2001

After a 12-year absence, the 1971-1982 Kansas City wordmark returns to the road jersey front. It is vertically arched in two-colors, royal blue outlined with white. All lettering follows the theme of the wordmark, royal blue over white. Block with Serifs number font is used as had been since the 1992 season. Trim is limited to thin blue knit trim ¾" from the end of the sleeve ends.

Name on back uses Block condensed typeface, regardless of name length, and is sewn on a nameplate.

1999

2001

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-2001 Alternate

1999

1996

Similar to the 1994 jersey it replaces, but sleeve trim is simplified and striped neck trim is removed. Identify by the relatively bold wordmark compared to later years.

Block Condensed name on a plate, one-color white Block Bold with Serifs numbers on back, front uses similar but not identical Front Block Bold with Serifs, also white.

1999

1995

© GameWornGuides.com

2002 Home

This is a one-year design. The style of the Royals script lettering is changed, it becomes taller and thinner. The small upstroke disappears from the bottom of the "O."

All lettering is now three-color, royal blue/white/black 3D drop shadow. Name on plate. The thickness of the outline and drop shadow on the front numbers are carefully made to match the Royals script. Sleeve patch loses the disc and is now just a shield. Crown color changes to black from gold.

2002-2005 are the years of the black drop shadows on everything for the Royals. A design used by many teams during the era. They eventually phased out the look as the trend faded.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002-2005 Alternate Home

Royals script lettering is changed, becoming taller and thinner. The small upstroke disappears from the bottom of the "O." In 2002, the thin white sleeve end trim disappears completely and now the jersey is simply plain blue.

Numbers are Block Bold on back, Dodgers front number font is borrowed for the front of these jerseys. Name is Block Condensed style, one-color white, sewn on a name-plate.

Team sleeve patch has a black top to the crown and a wide white border.

2002

2005

© GameWornGuides.com

2002-2005 Alternate Road

Ryan Magathan Collection

2004

2005

Bill Henderson Collection

Black button-front design with royal blue knit trim on jersey front and around collar and at sleeve ends

Two-color numbers and name, (no drop shadow), royal blue outlined with white.

Name on a plate, Block Condensed lettering used. New-style disc logo patch sewn on left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002-2005 Road Vest

Ryan Magathan Collection

2005

2004

Gray button front, three-color Kansas City arched on front.

Three-color lettering for name and number, royal blue/white/black 3D drop shadow. Name goes on a plate.

The thickness of the outline and drop shadow on the front number matches the Kansas City script.

New-style Royals disk patch goes on left sleeve of undershirt.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2005 Home Vest

Ryan Magathan Collection

For 2003, the home jersey loses its sleeves and becomes a vest, worn with an accompanying royal blue undershirt. Royals logo patch moves to the royal blue undershirt, the shield has a black crown on top.

Name/number lettering identical to 2002 home jersey. The thickness of the outline and drop shadow on the front numbers match the Royals script.

Below: Mike Sweeney wears a captain's C on his jersey front. It is three-color with 3D drop shadow, just like the rest of the lettering on the shirt. This photo is from the 2003 All-Star Game, explaining the sleeve patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2005 Royals Team Tagging

- Rawlings set and year flag tags continue through 1991. Russell takes over manufacture of Royals uniforms in 1992, and tagging is similar to many other teams who used Russell in those years (Brewers, Yankees, for example).
- Russell year tagging disappears by the late 1990s, and Royals stopped using year tagging during Majestic's contract up until the time that bar-code tagging started.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006-2021 Home

2006-2007 style patch with wide white border.

2008-2017 style patch with jersey fabric-color border.

2018 50th Anniversary patch replaces the team shield on the left sleeve for one season only.

2019-2021, the black drop shadow on the "KC" is removed, a change that is almost invisible.

The home jersey for 2006 loses all outlining and drop shadows, as well as all knit trim except for at the end of each sleeve. Numbers on the front, player names on the back. All lettering is one-color royal blue. The Royals script is a little thinner with a shorter tail under the name, looking more like the early 1970s version of the uniform. Nameplates are not used after 2007. Majestic makes these from 2006-2019, Nike from 2020-2021.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006-2021 Home, continued

2009

2019

2021

Note the change in style code from ROH1 for Majestic to ROH1 for Nike.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006-2011 Road

In 2006, the Royals altered their road uniforms, returning to a retro Kansas City script resembling the team's road uniforms last used in 1970.

In 2006-2007, the team shield sleeve patch has a ¼" white border. The top of the crown is gold again. Starting in 2008, the sleeve patch is slightly changed with a very thin white embroidered outline around the shield, and with the patch background is color keyed to the jersey fabric. Nameplates are no longer used after 2007.

1970 road flannel is shown (inset, below left) for comparison.

Left: 2006-2007 style patch with wide white border. Right: 2008-2011 style patch with jersey fabric color border. Same patch pattern is followed with the other colored jerseys.

Original 1970

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Alternate Home/2007 Alternate Blue/ 2008-2013 Alternate Road

Ryan Magathan Collection

Above: 2008-2013 sleeve patch gains jersey-colored background; loses thick white border, compared to 2006-2007 style (right).

White knit trim at sleeve end returns, last seen on blue alternate jerseys in 2001. Number font is Dodgers' Block on the front, Block Extra Bold on the back.

Like the home jersey, the team lettering script is altered, growing bigger with a slightly lighter stroke (similar to the early 1970s style).

Team logo shield used on the left sleeve of all 2006-2013 jerseys. In 2006-2007, the team shield sleeve patch has a ¼" white border. The top of the crown is gold again, as the black is gone.

Worn as a home alternate in 2006, and used both home and road in 2007. With the introduction of the light (Columbia) blue home alternate jersey in 2008, this jersey is redesignated for road use only.

Starting in 2008, the sleeve patch is slightly different with a very thin white embroidered outline around the shield, and with the patch background is color keyed to the jersey fabric.

Nameplates are no longer used after 2007.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Alternate Road

Bill Henderson Collection

This jersey could nearly be put in the "oddball" category. Announced as the Royals' road alternate jersey for 2006 replacing the 2002-2005 version, it was rarely worn. It was used for the first time for the Royals road opener against the Yankees on April 11, and then just a couple more times on the same road trip. Then, as far as I can determine, it was never worn again. After this year, the color black was banished from the Royals uniform palate.

This style was officially discontinued from use by the team after 2006. Can we assume someone did not like them?

Notice that this jersey has blue sleeve end knit trim, but none around the collar and on the placket like the previous 2002-2005 black jersey had.

The MLB Silhouetted batter on this neck back is blue/gold, but is blue/silver on the previous black jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2008-2011 Alternate Home

Ryan Magathan Collection

2008

This jersey is designed to look “retro” without being an exact copy of an earlier style. Its color is called Columbia blue. The Royals were the very last team in MLB to abandon powder blue road jerseys (after 1991) and the first to re-adopt them, 17 years later.

Logo script is royal/white, numbers and NOB are white/royal. No nameplates used.

The sleeve patch has a very thin white embroidered outline around the shield, and the patch background is (somewhat) color keyed in blue to match the jersey fabric.

2008

2008

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2021 Road

Ryan Magathan Collection

*2006-2011 wordmark (above) compared to 2012 version (below)

2012-2017 style patch with jersey fabric color border.

2018 50th Anniversary patch replaces the team shield on the left sleeve for one season only.

2019-2021, the black drop shadow on the "KC" is removed, a change that is almost invisible.

The road jersey script is "tweaked" slightly for 2012. The changes are subtle, so I have shown both the old and new side by side.

First, the front wordmark is altered. It is now more proportional and appears less vertically stretched and tall.

Second, the sleeve end trim changes from the former blue knit trim to new blue and white narrow knit trim that is also used on the team pants.

Third, the gray uniform cloth is slightly darker tinted than before. It appears from photographs to now be the same color as the Dodgers road uniforms.

The version of Block font used for front numbers is the same as used on the road and light blue jerseys in the prior couple of years. It is thinner in stroke and the letters are wider and seem more square than used by other teams.

All lettering is blue outlined with white. No nameplates are used. Majestic is manufacturer from 2012-2019, Nike from 2020-2021.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2021 Road, continued

2009

2019

2020

Note the change in style code from ROR2 for Majestic to RO22 for Nike.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2015 Alternate Home/ 2016-2021 Alternate Home Light Blue

Ryan Magathan Collection

The light blue (former Columbia blue) jersey changes a bit for 2012.

First, the fabric color changes to a slightly deeper shade, called "Atlantic Blue" (dare we say almost periwinkle?). The front script reverses colors, from its previous blue outlined with white to now white outlined with blue.

Front numbers are just like those on the new-for-2012 road jersey: a variation of the old familiar Athletic Block font, thinner in stroke but with numerals that are wider and squarer.

Numbers are blue/white on front, also the reverse of the prior years' style. Back name and numbers are white outlined with blue. Majestic is manufacturer from 2012-2019, Nike for 2020-2021.

2012-2017 style patch with jersey fabric color border.

2018 50th Anniversary patch replaces the team shield on the left sleeve for one season only.

2019-2021, the black drop shadow on the "KC" is removed, a change that is almost invisible.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2015 Alternate Home/2016-2021 Alternate Home Light Blue, continued

2015

2017

Note the change in style code from ROAC for Majestic to RO3C for Nike.

2020

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2021 Alternate Road

Press Release 11/25/2013: The Royals rolled out a new look Monday morning by unveiling an updated alternate road uniform that offers a "royal blue" jersey with traditional road gray pants. It also includes the classic KC script logo over the heart. It is the logo that appears on the club's caps, but this marks the first time it will appear on their regular season uniforms.
"The KC logo continued to be extremely popular with our fan base and is synonymous with Kansas City," said Kevin Uhlich, the club's senior vice president for business operations. "With that in mind, the Royals are excited to incorporate the logo into our uniform collection for the 2014 season."
A club release said the new look "includes several design elements featured in the club's various blue 'batting practice' jerseys worn from the 1980s into the early 2000s."
The jersey is trimmed in white and powder-blue piping. The numeral and player name will be white with a powder-blue outline.

2018 left sleeve 50th Anniv patch

Patch without drop shadow on "KC" starts 2019.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2021 Alternate Road, continued

Note the change in style code from ROA3 for Majestic to RO33 for Nike.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2021 Alternate Home "Los Reales"

2016-2017

2019-2021

After premiering a "Los Reales" jersey in 2015 for a single game, the Royals bring the jersey into their rotation as an official alternate in 2016, now in Flex Base. Aside from the update to the wordmark, this is identical to their home jersey. However, the sleeve patches change yearly from 2016-20, including the team's "KC" logo patch on the left sleeve, which has drop shadows on the "KC" for the 2016-2017 seasons, but not on the 2019-2021 version. Other patch variations include:

- June 25, 2016: World Series Champs patch right sleeve
- Jun 24, 2017: ACE 30 memorial patch on right sleeve
- September 1, 2018: 50th Anniversary patch on left sleeve and gold pediatric cancer ribbon on left chest
- June 21, 2019: MLB150 patch right sleeve (and new left-sleeve patch with no drop shadow on "KC" as worn on all of their jerseys starting in 2019)
- September 12, 2020: DG memorial patch right sleeve
- September 17, 2021: No additional patches

Nike takes over manufacture in 2020, and their logo appears on the right chest. The jersey is removed from the team's official lineup after 2021.

2018

2018

2020

2019

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2021 Alternate Home “Los Reales”, continued

2018

2020

Note the change in style code from RORL for Majestic to RO3L for Nike.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of old.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2021 Alternate Home Gold Trimmed

Note the change in style code from ROAW for Majestic to RO3W for Nike.

2017 drop shadow on "KC"

2018 50th Anniversary patch replaces team shield

2019-2021, drop shadow on "KC" removed

After winning the 2015 World Series, the Royals introduced a gold-trimmed home jersey to celebrate for a single game, the following April of 2016. Apparently, the team and fans liked it so much, that management asked MLB for license to use the gold-accented jersey as an alternate all year long, which was approved. With some minor modifications, the jersey intended for a one-time World Series celebration became part of the official rotation in 2017. In this version the Royals wordmark and player names appear in royal blue/metallic gold, while both front and back numbers are metallic gold/royal blue Block. Majestic is the manufacturer from 2017-2019, Nike takes over for 2020-2021. It is discontinued after the 2021 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 Home

The Royals make very subtle updates to their home jerseys for 2022, focused mainly on their sleeve-end braid, which is now considerably wider than before. Otherwise, status quo for this consistent and classic style. The 2022 version has the Art Stewart memorial patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 Road

The Royals look back to look forward, updating their road jerseys to resemble their 1971-1972 set, including the quirky front lettering. The blue sleeve-end trim is now considerably wider than the previous set as well. All lettering is single-color blue, while front and back numbers and player names have been updated to match style of the home jersey. The 2022 version has the Art Stewart memorial patch on the right sleeve.

The new front lettering is a direct reference to the team's 1971-1972 road jersey (above), including the unique, likely hand-drawn quirks of the original.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 Alternate Home

Powder blue is nothing new for the Royals, so this version of the team's home alternate continues team tradition, but simplifies the previous generation of this style. Wide white sleeve-end trim replaces the previous two-color braid. All lettering is now single-color white, while front and back numbers and player names have been updated to match font of the home jersey. The 2022 version has the Art Stewart memorial patch on the right sleeve. In 2022, these are paired with white plants and matching wide, power blue braid down the leg. For 2023, new powder blue pants are unveiled to complete the look for certain games.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 Alternate Road

The Royals update their road alternate jersey to match the rest of their new set, essentially reproducing their road jersey (including the quirky front lettering) in different colors. Here, Nike makes this dark blue jersey with wide, white sleeve-end trim. All lettering, front and back, is single-color white, The 2022 version has the Art Stewart memorial patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 City Connect

The Royals use their City Connect entry to honor Kansas City baseball history, local landmarks, and throw in a reference to the Beatles as well. The Royals check in with a dark blue jersey that honors colors worn by KC baseball teams of the past ("the Monarchs, Blues, Bluestockings, Packers, and Athletics," according to the team), while the powder blue elements tie in the Royals' own history. The KC logo on front, "R" patch on the sleeve, and embroidery over the jock tag pay tribute to the many fountains across the city (and Kauffman Stadium). Wide white/powder blue/white sleeve-end trim directly refers to similar adornments on Royals jerseys of the past. Front numbers and player names on back appear in powder blue, while the back number is in white, all in a font that echoes the art deco elements of the city's architecture. Finally, "HEY HEY HEY HEY" is embroidered inside the collar of the jersey (an element, like the tail embroidery, never seen on the field, but very visible at retail), which comes from the team's victory song, "Kansas City/Hey Hey Hey Hey" by Carl Perkins (and later The Beatles).

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020-2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly - a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Royals classic home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. In Spring Training, the team used jerseys with the 2023-size back lettering, but were forced to change to start the season. See the page in the oddball section for more info. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the "Royals" script now breaks across the "y" instead of between the "o" and "y" as it once had. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the jersey rather than on to it. This makes most teams' trim seem wider, but the Royals already used wide trim on sleeve ends, so the change is negligible. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. The ad patch appears opposite the team patch starting this season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Road

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Royals recently updated road jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. In Spring Training, the team used jerseys with the 2023-size back lettering, but were forced to change to start the season. See the page in the oddball section for more info. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the "KANSAS CITY" lettering breaks in about the same place, across the second "A," as it once had. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the jersey rather than on to it. This makes most teams' trim seem wider, but the Royals already used wide trim on sleeve ends, so the change is negligible. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. The ad patch appears opposite the team patch starting this season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Royals popular powder blue jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. In Spring Training, the team used jerseys with the 2023-size back lettering, but were forced to change to start the season. See the page in the oddball section for more info. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the "Royals" script now breaks across the "y" instead of between the "o" and "y" as it once had. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the jersey rather than on to it. This makes most teams' trim seem wider, but the Royals already used wide trim on sleeve ends, so the change is negligible. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. The ad patch appears opposite the team patch starting this season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Road

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Royals recently updated royal alternate jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. In Spring Training, the team used jerseys with the 2023-size back lettering, but were forced to change to start the season. See the page in the oddball section for more info. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the "KANSAS CITY" lettering breaks in about the same place, across the second "A," as it once had. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the jersey rather than on to it. This makes most teams' trim seem wider, but the Royals already used wide trim on sleeve ends, so the change is negligible. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. The ad patch appears opposite the team patch starting this season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024-2025 City Connect

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Royals recently unveiled City Connect jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller (much smaller, in this case), and arching the name lettering more prominently. Sleeve-end trim is still sewn on to the jersey rather than in to it like most VPE jerseys, likely because of the extreme width of the trim used. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. The team's ad patch, introduced prior to the 2024 season, is now included opposite the "R" patch, which varies location depending on player handedness. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite the updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

For the Royals iconic home jersey, those changes mainly mean that back and front numbers are enlarged to their former size. Aside from the VPE changes, the team's ad patch also changes shape for 2025. Otherwise, these remain the same as in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of neck trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. Like other 2025 jerseys, gray jerseys also have back name and numbers enlarged, in most cases back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, like the Royals with their bold front and back numbers, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025 here as well. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, like the Royals did with their bold front and back numbers, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Road

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, like the Royals did with their bold front and back numbers, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1982-1994 Batting Practice

Near left: This photo of Bo Jackson from 1988 shows sleeve numbers and no name on back.
Far left: This 1992-1994 Russell jersey has low number placement which is a good clue that a NOB was once present. The Royals almost always remove NOBs before releasing their jerseys into the hobby.

Bottom right: This jersey, said to be from 1991, has numbers on the sleeves and no name on back.

Right: Tom Poquette late 1980's Rawlings BP jersey features extra-wide Block lettering.

Pullover, mesh fabric, identify by the multi-colored knit sleeve end and neck trim. Varsity numbers on the left sleeve 1982-1991. No sleeve numbers 1992-1994.

Block Bold numbers used on the back.

No names on back through 1990. NOB appears in about 1991. Nameplates are used.

© GameWornGuides.com

1983 Alternate Batting Practice

Made by Wilson, this is a peculiar style jersey, and we've seen two of them offered at auction in the past couple of years. One was year tagged 1983, the other had no team tagging. They feature an abundance of wide tri-colored elastic trim at the neck, sleeve ends and waist that one would imagine would have made them very restrictive and uncomfortable to wear. Clunky-stylized KC logo on the front left chest, Varsity numbers on back, and an odd Varsity variant for the sleeve numbers. I am always wary of including examples of star player jerseys that do not have a solid authentication, but I share the #5 (George Brett) example below simply to show the style in use.

© GameWornGuides.com

Early 1990s Alternate Zip-Neck Batting Practice

Shown are two variants the Royals' version of the Majestic Gamewarmer zip-neck pullover batting practice jersey style supplied to many MLB teams in the early 1990s. All have a short zipper at the neck with wide knit neck trim. The sleeve trim is more complicated than the other style of BP jerseys, and is again common to this style of Majestic jersey.

Left: 1994 with the 125th MLB patch on the sleeve. Sleeve and neck trim is royal/white and gray. Top right: Photo from 1993 and is the same style. Bottom right: Notice the different neck and sleeve trim with thinner stripes, in this undated photo from later in the 1990s.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-2000 Batting Practice

Blue mesh fabric with stylized KC logo on the left chest. Identify by the thin white knit trim on the sleeve ends.

Numbers are white, Block Bold with Serifs on the back only. Sometimes names are sewn in Block Bold (as in the Crawford example, bottom center).

Names sewn on nameplates are used on this style of BP jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2001 Batting Practice

Unnumbered jersey

One-year batting practice jersey style is blue mesh with plain white lettering. White knit trim on shirt front, around the back of collar and at sleeve ends.

Bold Majestic Varsity Numbers on front and back, name on back in Block sewn on a mesh nameplate.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002 Batting Practice

- 2002 batting practice jersey is also a one-year model, solid blue mesh with black drop shadow added to Royals lettering script.
- One-color white numbers in Majestic Varsity Bold on front and back.
- Names on back, all one-color. Names sewn on nameplates.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2005 Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

- Softer, non-mesh “tech” fabric, Royals white script lettering with black 3D drop shadow, jersey has black sleeve inserts.
- Extra bold Majestic Varsity numbers two-color, white with black 3D drop shadow on both back and front, very hard to see.
- One-color white name on a plate.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Batting Practice

The Royals' uniform overhaul in 2006 reaches to their batting practice jersey as well, where the black 3D drop shadows of previous years are also removed here. Otherwise, the BP jersey has the same specs as 2003-2005 version. This is a one-year style, which was be updated with MLB's league-wide template change in 2007.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 Batting Practice

In 2007, all MLB teams change to a one-button Cool Base batting practice jersey. Contrasting side panels are white and royal blue.

All lettering, names, and numbers are heat-applied appliqués; no longer sewn-on tackle-twill.

Numbers are white Block Bold, player names are block standard.

Top right: Notice Mike Sweeney's captain's C on the right chest – also a heat applied decal.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Batting Practice

Ryan Magathan Collection

MLB redesigns all team batting practice jerseys for 2011. New design features a full button front, contrasting white side panels.

Tackle twill returns for wordmarks and player names/numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Batting Practice

With the 2014 all-team redesign of batting practice jerseys in Major League Baseball, the Royals took the opportunity to change the appearance of their batting practice jersey. They reverted back to the interlocking KC logo used on their caps, their new-for-2014 alternate road game jersey and last seen on their batting practice jerseys 14 seasons prior, in 2000.

Cool Base fabric with white side panels, all white twill lettering, Bold block numbers on back only, knit royal/white trim at sleeve ends and around neck. Player names used on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

Ryan Magathan Collection

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Royals use their regular season blue alternate road, with a World Series champs patch on the left sleeve as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill/powder blue. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Royals spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, a single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The Royals again use their regular season blue alternate road as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing where the Royals spend Spring Training. The 2017 model also has the “ACE 30” memorial patch for pitcher Yordano Ventura on right chest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Royals jersey is royal blue with white back and underarm gussets. The "KC" logo appears on the front left chest in white. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in white Block on the left sleeve. The 2017 model also has the “ACE 30” memorial patch for pitcher Yordano Ventura on right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns.

The Royals use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, featuring a script "R" on front from their home wordmark in white/powder blue. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns.

The Royals use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, introduced the prior year, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "ARZ," referencing their Spring Training home. The name and back numbers are white/powder blue twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2021 Spring Training

2021

Spring Training jerseys are simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill. For 2020-2021, the Royals use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, introduced two years prior, with white/powder blue name and back numbers. For 2020, the DG memorial patch for former owner David Glass is on the right sleeve. In 2021, the Royals also tested out a new jersey template during Spring Training, described later in this chapter, though only some players were issued the test style while others continued on with the Nike version of Flex Base that spring.

2020

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 Spring Training Home

The Royals update their Spring Training jerseys when they refresh their regular season look. Now, though they wear two different jerseys in Spring Training, both are exactly the same as their regular season counterparts. Here, their home alternate jersey also stands in as their home jersey for spring, This jersey is Nike's version of the Flex Base template in powder blue with wide white sleeve-end trim, and all front and back lettering in white. The 2022 version has the Art Stewart memorial patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 Spring Training Road

The Royals update their Spring Training jerseys when they refresh their regular season look. Now, though they wear two different jerseys in Spring Training, both are exactly the same as their regular season counterparts. Here, their road alternate jersey also stands in as their road jersey for spring, This jersey is Nike's version of the Flex Base template in blue with wide white sleeve-end trim, and all front and back lettering in white. The 2022 version has the Art Stewart memorial patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

Special Events Jerseys

1993 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

May 22, 1993: The Royals first Turn Back the Clock game saw them appear in replicas of their 1969 flannels, courtesy of Mitchell & Ness (which in foresight look nearly identical to their future 2007 knit uniforms!). They wore these to honor the induction of team founder and owner Ewing Kauffman into the Royals Hall of Fame.

Former Mitchell & Ness historian Moriah Levin recalls that with these uniforms, Kansas City in was the first MLB team to take the field in all flannel uniforms since MLB dropped them in 1973 (ironically the Royals, along with the Yankees and Expos, were also the last team to drop them).

AP photo

For more info, including video of players in this uniform, visit https://www.mlb.com/video/royals-hall-of-fame-kauffman-c20296693.

© GameWornGuides.com

1994 “Salute to the Negro Leagues” (1924 KC Monarchs) The First MLB Negro Leagues Tribute Game

The blog “Royal Heritage” is a wonderful site http://kcbbh.blogspot.com that contains quite a bit of Royals’ history. It is authored by Royals’ fan Aaron Stilley. Of this 1994 contest, Aaron says:

The first Salute to the Negro Leagues at Kauffman Stadium, on August 3, 1994, came during heady times for Negro Leagues appreciation. The grand opening of the Negro Leagues Museum's current location was held just two days later. Ken Burns' Baseball documentary, which thrust Buck O'Neil and the Negro Leagues into a new level of notoriety, would debut in September.

Buck O'Neil discusses the night in his autobiography:

“In 1994, when the Kansas City Royals held a special Negro Leagues Night at Kauffman Stadium, they asked me what uniform the Royals should wear that night. I could have chosen the one worn by the '42 Monarchs, the best team I ever played on, or by the '55 Monarchs, the last Monarchs team I managed. But I selected the 1924 Monarchs' uniform. When I looked at Tom Gordon and Brian McRae and Jose Lind in those beautiful white pinstripes—just like the Yankees' uniforms—I saw Joe Rogan and Newt Allen and Jose Mendez. That's one of the great things about baseball, if you think about it. Yesterday comes so easy.”

The Royals’ Monarchs uniforms were made of navy-pinstriped cream-colored flannel by Ebbets Field Flannels. All lettering is navy felt The visiting Athletics dressed in their normal road uniforms.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995 Negro Leagues Tribute (1925 Kansas City Monarchs)

The Kansas City Royals were the first team to salute the Negro Leagues. Their 1994 "Salute" game began a tradition that has continued now for decades. The Royals note that they use the "stylings" of period Monarchs uniforms when designing their tribute, meaning that they may not be completely accurate reproductions of any single year, and in fact the reader will notice that there are several contests representing the same year that use different-looking uniforms.

The second annual Negro leagues tribute game was held in Kansas City on July 8, 1995, pitting the 1925 Kansas City Monarchs against the 1920 Detroit Stars (Detroit Tigers). These gray-bodied uniforms with navy placket and red raglan sleeves were made by Russell, which also made the Tigers' uniforms for the game. Bold varsity numbers on back are red outlined with navy. Heart-shaped "KC" patch is sewn to left sleeve, the 1995 MLB Negro Leagues patch (offered to all teams but only worn by a couple) is on the right sleeve. The Russell "R" logo is embroidered on the right sleeve end.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995 Negro Leagues Tribute (1942 Kansas City Monarchs)

Above: The jersey is an autographed one from the game.
Below: Also made by Ebbets Field Flannels, appears slightly different in letter spacing and in the font used for the player numbers. It is possibly a replica.

Ryan Magathan Collection

The Royals take their Negro Leagues tribute on the road to Seattle. These old-style wool-flannel uniforms were made by Ebbets Field Flannels. Jerseys are flannel with red/navy felt lettering.

In this particular game on September 9, 1995, the Mariners dressed as the Seattle Steelheads.

© GameWornGuides.com

1996 Negro Leagues Tribute (1942 Kansas City Monarchs)

The Royals welcomed the Tigers for a Negro Leagues Tribute night on August 24, 1996, with the Tigers wearing white Detroit Stars uniforms and the Royals in gray Kansas City Monarchs uniforms. The Tigers appear to have worn the same jerseys in Detroit earlier in the year, and the home Royals were in gray - possibly the same jerseys as worn the year prior. Aside from these video stills, we have been unable to find more detailed photos to compare this 1996 game's uniforms vs. the versions mentioned above. However, the specifications for the Royals set seems to follow the 1995 jerseys, with all lettering in red over dark blue, with blue/red/blue braid near each sleeve end, around the neck opening, and around collar and placket. A large "KC" patch is displayed on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

1997 Turn Back the Clock to 1977

The flier pictured above was used by the home-team Mariners to advertise the availability of the game worn the jerseys after the contest.

July 19, 1997: Game was played in Seattle turning back the clock to the Mariners' first year in Seattle, 1977.

The Royals played along, wearing knit replicas of their 1977 pullover road powder blues, made especially for the game by Ebbets Field Flannels.

The reproductions were fairly accurate, properly lettered with no player names on back and using correct player number type style. The knit sleeve ends are slightly too wide, and "Kansas City" wordmark on jersey front is a bit too tall and thin (compare to original, inset at left). We'll give this effort a solid "B."

© GameWornGuides.com

1998 Negro Leagues Tribute (1949 Kansas City Monarchs)

Ryan Magathan Collection

Buck O'Neil

June 13, 1998: Royals announcements of the day called these reproductions of the Kansas City Monarchs' 1949 uniforms. Their opponents that day were the Detroit Tigers who dressed as the 1935 Detroit Cubs.

Knit uniforms by Ebbets Field Flannels. All lettering is felt: red outlined with black.

Right: Team photo of the actual 1949 Kansas City Monarchs

Photo Courtesy Negro Leagues Baseball Museum

© GameWornGuides.com

1998 Turn Ahead the Clock

The Royals and the Mariners held the first ever Turn Ahead the Clock Game at Seattle on July 18, 1998. Both teams donned very silly looking uniforms that were supposed to predict what players would be wearing 25 years in the future (that would be 2023).

The Royals' 1998 jerseys are bright yellow, pants featured wide side stripes that went all the way down to the players' shoes. Back names and numbers looked very traditional in design, and are in Majestic Block on the back, though an odd mismatched number font is used on the front.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock

Bill Henderson Collection

Replica lettered by bigtimejerseys.com

- The Royals and the Mariners had played the first Turn Ahead the Clock game in 1998. MLB picked up on the idea and offered it as a promotion to the rest of baseball in 1999. The Royals' 1999 jersey is royal blue with a huge KC logo printed into the fabric of the front. The Royals' 1999 games took place against the Tigers in Detroit on July 22, and at home against Tampa Bay on August 14.
- White lettering on the back is in the same font used by the A's, Mets, Phillies and Mariners, in white twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Negro Leagues Tribute (1924 Kansas City Monarchs)

- June 26, 1999: Ebbets Field Flannels made Kansas City Monarchs jerseys of the Negro National League.
- Reproduction of the 1924 home jersey in navy pinstriped poly blend. Their opponent was the Indians, who dressed as the 1946 Cleveland Buckeyes.
- No player names on the back.
- Worn by the Monarchs as "World's Colored Champions."

© GameWornGuides.com

2000 Negro Leagues Tribute (1945 Kansas City Monarchs Home)

Ryan Magathan Collection

The Royals played the Pirates at home on June 10. The visiting Pirates dressed as the 1945 Homestead Grays. Knit uniforms were made by AIS, all lettering is navy/yellow twill.

Right: The AIS logo on this signed jersey's sleeve indicates that it was not game worn. AIS would not have been permitted to display its company branding on game worn items; in 2000 only Russell and Rawlings had that privilege.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000 Negro Leagues Tribute (1945 Kansas City Monarchs Road)

Ryan Magathan Collection

July 22, 2000: Visiting the Tigers in Detroit, the Royals dressed as the 1945 Monarchs in these knit uniforms by AIS. It was the first game of a doubleheader. The Tigers dressed as the Negro Leagues' Detroit Stars.

Steve Kraljic Collection

© GameWornGuides.com

2001 Negro Leagues Tribute (1942 Kansas City Monarchs Home)

Ryan Magathan Collection

June 23, 2001 vs. the Cleveland Indians, who dressed as the 1946 Buckeyes.

Knit uniforms are made by AIS. All lettering is red over navy twill.

The annual Negro Leagues Tribute tradition began in 1994, and has been repeated each year since then. In 1997, 2002, and 2011, Negro Leagues nights were held, but Monarchs uniforms weren't a part of the games.

© GameWornGuides.com

2001 Negro Leagues Tribute (1942 Kansas City Monarchs Road)

Ryan Magathan Collection

1942

This game was played July 14, 2001 in Pittsburgh. The host Pirates dressed as the 1935 Homestead Grays. These gray knit uniforms with navy raglan sleeves were made by AIS. All adornments are in navy/red twill.

Far left, middle left: Satchel Paige as a member of the 1942 Monarchs team.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003 Negro Leagues Tribute (1924 Kansas City Monarchs)

Steve Kraljic Collection

These reproduction double knits of the Kansas City Monarchs of the Negro Leagues were made by AIS.

The game was played on June 29, 2003 and the opponents were the St. Louis Cardinals who dressed as the 1928 St. Louis Stars.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003 Negro Leagues Tribute (1945 Kansas City Monarchs)

The game was played on July 26, 2003 in Detroit vs. the Tigers, who dressed as the 1920 Detroit Stars

These re-production double knits of the Kansas City Monarchs of the Negro Leagues were made by AIS.

© GameWornGuides.com

2004 Negro Leagues Tribute (1945 Kansas City Monarchs)

June 13, 2004: Game played vs. the Mets who appeared as the 1944 New York Cubans.

AIS made these 2004 reproductions of the 1945 Monarchs uniforms in double knit.

Top left: Jackie Robinson above left as a member of the original club in 1945.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005 Negro Leagues Tribute (1948 Kansas City Monarchs)

Ryan Magathan Collection

July 10, 2005: Kansas City Monarchs vs. Minnesota Twins as St. Paul Gophers, game played in Kansas City.

Uniforms made by AIS, all lettering is sewn felt.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Negro Leagues Tribute (1949 Kansas City Monarchs)

- In 2006, the Royals appeared twice as the Negro League Kansas City Monarchs, in both home and road uniforms. AIS is their manufacturer
- This game was played on June 25, 2006 vs. the Brewers, who appeared as the 1923 Milwaukee Bears.
- Back numbers are Varsity, single-color red on the home jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Negro Leagues Tribute (1942 Kansas City Monarchs)

July 15, 2006 vs. the Tigers dressed as the 1920 Detroit Stars. The Royals appeared as the Negro League Kansas City Monarchs, in road uniforms. AIS is the manufacturer.

Back numbers are Varsity, red/navy on the road jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007 Negro Leagues Tribute (1940s Kansas City Monarchs

July 1, 2007: in Kansas City vs. White Sox, again the Royals dressed as the Monarchs. They played the White Sox who dressed as Chicago American Giants.

While these jerseys were supposed to represent a 1945 version of the Monarchs' uniform, the reliable Royal Heritage blog says that they are not accurate to any one specific year, but that they were inspired by features of both the 1942 and 1949 uniforms.

All Royals jerseys had a "42" patch for Jackie Robinson. Caps had a 22 patch for Buck O'Neil, all coaches wore #22 that day for O'Neil.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007 Negro Leagues Tribute (1924 Kansas City Monarchs)

- Game played on June 23, 2007 in Milwaukee vs. the Brewers dressed as the 1923 1923 Negro League Milwaukee Bears.
- The Royals dressed as the Negro League Kansas City Monarchs as they often do in throwback games.
- Double knit uniforms are made by AIS.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007 Negro League Tribute (1948 Kansas City Monarchs)

Nick DiSalvo photos

Game played July 21, 2007 vs. the Tigers in Detroit. Rather plain uniforms made of gray double knit by AIS. All lettering is red twill. Varsity numbers on back, red/gray/red knit trim at sleeve ends and on the tops of the sleeves right up to the neck opening.

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 Negro Leagues Tribute (1951-1952 Kansas City Monarchs)

The June 22, 2008 contest pitted the Royals dressed as the 1951-1952 Kansas City Monarchs vs. the San Francisco Giants, who dressed as the New York Royal Giants.

Uniforms were red pinstriped double knit with several unique trim elements and made by AIS. Front and back lettering is navy outlined with red.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Negro Leagues Tribute (1924 Kansas City Monarchs)

Ryan Magathan Collection

Steve Kraljic Collection

Game played in Kansas City May 30, 2009 vs. Chicago White Sox, who dressed as the 1926 Chicago American Giants.

Uniforms made of double knit by AIS. All lettering is navy blue twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Negro Leagues Tribute (1949 Kansas City Monarchs)

- Two consecutive games played in Pittsburgh, June 26 and June 27, 2009. The Pirates dressed as the 1935 Homestead Grays.
- These appear to be the identical style uniforms as used for the 2007 road contest vs. the Tigers, all made by AIS. Red twill lettering, Varsity numbers on the back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010 Negro Leagues Tribute (1949 Kansas City Monarchs)

Ryan Magathan Collection

- Game played in Kansas City July 31, 2010 vs. the Baltimore Orioles who dressed as the Baltimore Elite Giants.
- Uniforms made in double knit by AIS. All lettering in red over dark blue. Back number font is Block with Serifs, same as used on the Royals' normal game road uniforms 1992-1994.

2011's Missing Monarchs: For unknown reasons, the Royals decided to skip dressing in throwback uniforms in 2011. The cost of making a set of throwback uniforms was speculated as a possible cause.

1949

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Negro Leagues Tribute (1949 Kansas City Monarchs)

June 9, 2012: Kansas City at Pittsburgh (Grays). These knit jerseys by AIS are visually identical to ones worn in road games in both 2007 and 2009.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Negro Leagues Tribute (1941 Kansas City Monarchs)

July 21, 2012: Minnesota at Kansas City. The Twins played as the 1908 St. Paul Colored Gophers, though the word "Colored" was dropped from nearly every mention. AIS cream-colored knit jerseys. All lettering is dark navy.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1951 AA Kansas City Blues

Ryan Magathan Collection

June 30, 2012: Kansas City at Minnesota (1951 minor league throwbacks), game two of a doubleheader. Gray knit uniforms were made by Majestic for the occasion.

Left: Mickey Mantle spent 40 games as a member of the Blues (a AAA class minor league team in the American Association) in 1951 during an early-career slump.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2013 Memorial Day

Ryan Magathan Collection

All of MLB wore camouflaged-lettered uniforms May 27 for Memorial Day. The Royals played the Cardinals at home, and modified their standard home uniforms for the event. Desert camouflage on white is difficult to see, but these were passable in execution.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Negro Leagues Tribute (1942 Kansas City Monarchs)

Ryan Magathan Collection

August 24, 2013: Washington at Kansas City, knit uniforms made by AIS. AIS had made uniforms for the 1942 Monarchs before, (for the 2001 game) and while they are similar to these, they are not identical. The coloring of all lettering is reversed from these earlier examples.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2015 St. Patrick's Day

Ryan Magathan Collection

While they have usually been St. Patrick's Day nonobservant, the Royals donned special green and white variants of their new-for-2014 batting practice jerseys for their Spring Training game on March 17...

...topping the uniform off with green and white hats. All lettering is white twill. The same style jerseys were worn in 2015 (but with different cap).

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Negro Leagues Tribute (1924 Kansas City Monarchs)

May 18, 2014: Baltimore at Kansas City. The Orioles dress as the Baltimore Black Sox, the Royals as the 1924 Monarchs. These cream-colored knit navy-pinstriped uniforms are made for the Royals by Majestic, not AIS, significant in that AIS had exclusively been making the Negro League tribute Monarch uniforms since 2001 up until this game. All lettering in navy twill.

Hard to reconcile the appearance of these 1924 replica Monarchs jersey with the ones worn in 2009, 2003 and 1994 that look completely different.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Memorial Day

Ryan Magathan Collection

May 26, 2014: This year, the Royals chose to modify their light blue home alternate jerseys for the all-MLB observance. Military Desert Camouflage twill outlined with royal blue is a reasonably good combination and is actually even somewhat visible from the seats, unlike the uniforms of many other teams on this day. The front number is camo outlined with white, same sleeve patch as on normal game jersey. All jerseys marketed to fans after the contest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1974

August 30, 2014: The Royals hosted the Indians for a Turn Back the Clock to 1974 game. The Royals wore near-exact copies of their 1974 pullover uniforms by Majestic. All trim and lettering is correctly proportioned, the right font is used for player numbers, and player names are omitted as they were in 1974. The visiting Indians wore equally well-crafted versions of their wild-for-1974 red jerseys. Uniforms for both teams were auctioned after the game on MLB.com.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Negro Leagues Tribute (1953 Kansas City Monarchs)

Derek Damian Collection

Continuing their long tradition of wearing throwbacks for “Salute to the Negro Leagues” games, the Royals recall the 1953 Monarchs home uniforms for a May 17 contest against the Yankees, who do not play along and wear their regular road uniforms. The cream-colored, blue pinstriped jerseys, made in full knit by Majestic, feature “Monarchs” in a tall, vertically arched font on front with blue Block with Serif numbers on back and left pant leg. Blue knit trim adorns the placket and sleeve ends. The uniforms also honored the late Cubs’ player Ernie Banks, who played for the Monarchs from 1950-1953, with a patch on the left sleeve that pays tribute to him. The Yankees wear a similar (but not identical) tribute patch on their jerseys as well.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Memorial Day

For Memorial Day 2015, on May 25, the Royals apply the camo treatment to their road blue alternate jersey. The top layer of white twill is replaced with desert camo, while all other elements, (save for the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo, which gets the camo recoloring), remain the same. Overall, this is one of the better jerseys from this promotion, as it is fairly easy to see the front and back lettering on the dark jersey background. Some teams' lettering, especially those using plain camouflage lettering on white or gray jerseys is nearly invisible from the seats.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1915 Federal League KC Packers

Ryan Magathan Collection

The Royals throw back to the 1915 Federal League Kansas City Packers in a May 31 road game against the Cubs, who wear 1915 Federal League Chicago Whales uniforms. These gray pinstriped knit jerseys by Majestic feature the red "Kansas City" sewn on front in a fancy display font, and red back numbers in a similar style. Numbers, of course, were not worn in 1915, nor was the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo, which appears on the back of the collar. Note also sun collar on the jersey, a period-appropriate touch.

In 2014, the Diamondbacks, who were visiting Wrigley for its centennial celebration on April 23, wore 1914 road uniforms of the KC Packers to commemorate the matchup from the ballpark's first game. Thus, in consecutive years, two different ball clubs combined to wear every KC Packers road uniform ever – all two of them.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2015 Independence Day

Ryan Magathan Collection

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys.

All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Royals wear their home white jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in red, including their front logo as well as front and back numbers. The Royals are one of four teams (with the Dodgers, Yankees, and Tigers) whose lettering goes from one layer to two for this special promotion. Player names on back are in red. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1985 World Series

July 23, 2015: 30 years after the original event, the Cardinals and Royals relive their matchup in the “I-70” 1985 World Series, and both teams wear throwbacks to honor the occasion. The full-weight Majestic knit jersey is, overall, a decent recreation, including the blue-tinted buttons and team disc patch. However, the originals used vertically arched Wilson hand-drafted names on back; here they are standard block in radial arch. Contrary to the originals, this jersey also features a 1985 World Series Champs anniversary patch on the right sleeve, the Majestic logo on the left sleeve, and an MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back of the collar.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Hispanic Heritage

As part of their "Viva Los Reales" game against the Astros on July 25, the Royals wear their first Hispanic Heritage jersey. Aside form the wordmark, which changes from "Royals" to "Los Reales," the rest of the jersey is the same as their standard home uniforms. These were made in both Majestic Cool Base and knit versions, depending on specific player preferences. The Astros counter with their own orange "Los Astros" jerseys.

Looking for the 2016 Los Reales jersey? It became an official Royals alternate home jersey selection in 2016 and so was moved to the front section of this chapter.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 St. Patrick's Day

Repeating a team tradition started only two years prior, the Royals again go green for St. Patrick's Day 2016 in a Spring Training game on March 17. This Flex Base jersey is in solid green, with front logo and back numbers in white/gray and player name in white. The layer of gray is narrow and pale enough that it disappears from a distance. The right sleeve sports a white shamrock, a feature shared by several other teams for the 2016 St. Patrick's Day promotion. The Royals' team sleeve patch appears on the left side, reduced to shades of gray and white, while white knit trim encircles both sleeves.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Ring Day/Friday Alternate Jersey

Like a number of teams in the last decade, the Royals celebrate their World Series championship with a gold-trimmed jersey to start the following season, in this case twice, on April 3 and 5. Based on the team's home jersey, this Flex Base entry by Majestic features the Royals' typically one-color wordmark and back numbers in metallic gold/royal blue, The front number and player names remained their usual royal blue. The left sleeve sports the team's usual patch, while the right bears one honoring the previous year's World Series victory. Not long into the season, the team asked MLB for permission to wear this jersey as a Friday home alternate, which they did for the remainder of the year.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016 Mother's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carry-over from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Royals wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Negro Leagues Tribute (1948 Kansas City Monarchs)

The Royals' annual "Salute to the Negro Leagues" continues May 15, 2016, with another Kansas City Monarchs entry. Though no specific date was given, these closely resemble the Monarchs' 1948 home uniforms. The cream-colored Majestic knit jerseys have "Monarchs" in a navy, serifed, vertically arched font on front, with "KC" on the left sleeve in navy Block, and back numbers in navy Block Bold with Serifs. Navy knit trim adorns the neck opening, placket, and sleeve ends. The visiting Braves wore 1948 Atlanta Black Crackers uniforms.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Royals apply the camouflage trimmings to their home white jerseys for the game on May 30. All lettering and numbering, front and back, is rendered in woodland camo, devoid of black outlines or black player names that other teams use. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are also changed to single-color black from their usual royal blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1976

On June 4 in Cleveland, the Royals dust off their 1976 powder blue road uniforms, while the Indians throw back to their 1976 blue jerseys. The Royals' full knit Majestic pullovers are good copies of the originals, though the shape of the V-neck is off, though that may be more an element of the players wearing uniforms much baggier than in the 1970s and 80s. Front lettering is vertically arched while the Varsity back numbers are appropriate for the era, as is the lack of a name on back, though the back numbers on the originals were sewn higher than these. The team's disc patch correctly appears on the left sleeve, and refreshingly, the anachronistic MLB Silhouetted Batter logo does not appear on the back of the collar.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016 Father's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms Father's Day, Sunday, June 19. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white.

The Royals wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering, player names on back, and front and back numbers are light blue. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally royal blue, becomes light blue. Like the Dodgers Father's Day jersey, the Royals jersey looks very similar to what they normally wear on the field at home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Independence Day

Ryan Magathan Collection

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Royals are on the road and wear their road jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Royals select the blue twill version with red outlines for their front lettering and for their front and back numbers, with a red player name on back. The Royals are one of only three teams (with the Dodgers and Padres) to have additional layers of twill added to their typically single-layer jerseys. Several other teams, in contrast, have their multi-layer designs simplified to two colors. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016, team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors, and all jersey trim, normally blue/white, becomes single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Negro Leagues Tribute (1941 Kansas City Monarchs)

The Royals once again throw back to the 1941 Kansas City Monarchs on May 7, 2017, though this is the first time the uniform is made by Majestic. These cream, full-knit jerseys have the same general appearance as earlier AIS versions, but the details differ all around. The red/blue front wordmark is gently radially arched in a compact serif face, contrary to earlier vertically arched versions with much taller lettering. Red/blue back numbers are now in block rather than Varsity of years past.

The jersey also features a sun collar, and blue/red/blue braid near the end of the red raglan sleeves. Red/blue/red braid adorns the base of the sun collar and around the neck and placket. A red twill “KC” on a blue heart patch adorns the left sleeve. Blue/red player numbers were also worn on the pants.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Mother's Day

Pink-trimmed Mother's Day jerseys return on May 13-14, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic heat applied vinyl locker tag and team inventory tag inside the bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon glued on left chest; the pink Majestic sleeve logo; and the dark pink/light pink/white ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter applique stitched on the back of the collar. All multi-colored lettering is done in the lightweight-twill style. The Royals wear their home white jerseys with lettering in pink. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray. The "ACE 30" patch is on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Memorial Day (Road)

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black.

The Royals apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 27-28, 2017 and May 26-27, 2018. The 2017 version has the “ACE 30” patch on the right chest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Memorial Day (Home)

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Royals apply this style to their home white jerseys, with all lettering in olive green, as worn on May 29, 2017, with the “ACE 30” patch on the right chest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Father's Day

Light blue-trimmed Father's Day jerseys return on June 17-18, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic tagging and set tagging at the inside bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon glued on left chest, the light blue Majestic embroidered sleeve logo, and the dark royal blue/light blue/white back collar ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter patch.

The Royals wear road gray with the front logo lettering in light blue/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray. All jersey trim, normally white/royal blue, becomes gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. The "ACE 30" patch is on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 1 (day game of a doubleheader) and July 2, 2017 and July 2-4, 2018, the Royals wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill lettering throughout. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue. In 2017, the "ACE 30" patch is on the right chest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill – appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 3-4, 2017, the Royals wear their road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue. The "ACE 30" patch is on the right chest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Players Weekend

2017

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with hand-written black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25-27, 2017 and August 24-26, 2018, the Royals wear jerseys with royal blue bodies and powder blue sleeves with white nicknames and powder blue numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide powder blue/white/powder blue trim. The front features their home jersey script, here rendered in white kiss-cut lightweight twill. The 2017 version includes the "ACE" memorial patch for Yordano Ventura on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 St. Patrick's Day

The Royals bring back green for St. Patrick's Day in 2018, here on a white Flex Base jersey. The effect replicates their standard home jersey with all royal blue lettering swapped with green on front script, front and back numbers, and player name. The left-sleeve team patch is reduced to shades of gray, a green shamrock patch adorns the right sleeve, while royal blue knit trim is replaced with green near the sleeve ends.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Negro Leagues Tribute (1921 Kansas City Monarchs)

The Royals return to the 1921 Kansas City Monarchs for their Negro League tribute on May 6, 2018, the second time this style has appeared for the event. Now made by Majestic in cream full knit, this entry differs somewhat from the 2012 version made by AIS, especially in the shape and size of the front logo. Front “KC” ligature and Varsity back numbers in navy blue, while navy knit trim encircles both sleeves near the ends. The look is finished with a navy sun collar.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

The Royals celebrate their 50th season in 2018 and throw back to their original 1969 home uniforms on May 19. Echoing the relative simplicity of their current uniforms, these throwbacks capture the spirit of the 1969 jerseys, if not the details. Made by Majestic in full knit, the white jerseys are adorned with royal blue in every element, including front team script (looks more like their current script than the original), knit trim on neck opening and near sleeve ends (thinner than the original), and Varsity numbers on back (nailed it!). The 1969 MLB 100th Anniversary patch properly appears on the left sleeve. Though the throwback may not be accurate, the Royals are to be lauded for their consistency – this look is so similar to their current look, five decades later, that it may not have even been noticed as a throwback by many fans on TV or in the ballpark.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Memorial Day (Home)

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, with dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers joined by solid-color black player names on back. The outlines are nearly impossible to see as the two colors are so close in hue to each other. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are again simplified to single-color black, and a green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the US military, is stitched to the right sleeve.

The Royals apply this style to their powder blue alternate jerseys on May 28, 2018, creating a very strange amalgam of colors that are not usually represented together, and for good reason.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1998 Turn Ahead The Clock

The Royals had the distinction (misfortune?) to take on the Mariners for the first Turn Ahead the Clock game in 1998, and the Mariners welcome them back to do it all again on June 30, 2018. The Royals, however, decided to rewrite history rather than relive it, by creating a whole new futuristic jersey for the follow-up. Again a vest, this time in royal blue, the two-button Majestic Cool Base jersey features metallic gold knit trim around the neck and sleeve openings. Back numbers are white/metallic gold in Block. The front logo is also white/gold, but the gold layer is best described as a thick outline that doesn't quite line up, giving the appearance of a shadow above and below the script. It combines twill and embroidery as part of the effect, and it crowned with…well, a metallic gold on blue crown patch. The Royals updated their caps and helmets to match (the helmet design is particularly inspired) so kudos to them for playing along, and updating a throwback to the future.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019, 2021 St. Patrick's Day

After a year in white with green trim for St. Patrick's Day, the Royals return to full-out green for 2019. Now based on their Spring Training jersey, all adornment on the Majestic Flex Base jersey is white, from the "R" script logo on front left to the back name and number (in Block Bold). The team patch on left sleeve appears in shades of gray, while the white shamrock appears on the right. White knit trim runs around the neck and placket, as well as around the sleeves just above the ends. Jerseys were made by Nike for the 2020 season, but were not worn because the game was canceled during the COVID pandemic. The jerseys returned to the field in 2021, again made by Nike with their logo on front right chest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Negro Leagues Tribute (1941 Kansas City Monarchs)

Strikingly similar to the 2017 Monarchs throwback, also made by Majestic, the June 23, 2019 entry appears to have two differences. First, the "MONARCHS" lettering is spaced differently here on the jersey front than it was before, with the "A" now on the placket vs. to the right of it. Second, these jerseys now look to be white rather than cream. Otherwise, the rest of the details on this full-knit jersey remain. Front red/blue wordmark and block back numbers. The jersey also features a sun collar, and blue/red/blue braid near the end of the red raglan sleeves. Red/blue/red braid adorns the base of the sun collar and around the neck and placket. A red twill "KC" on a blue heart patch adorns the left sleeve. Blue/red player numbers were also worn on the pants.

Now you see it, now you don't.

At some point during the game, Alex Gordon's "S" fell off the front of his jersey, despite having appeared before the game. When the jersey was auctioned online, the winning bidder had the option of having the "S" restored, or leaving "Monarch" singular.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

After wearing their 1969 home throwback in 2018, the Royals take the show on the road, wearing replicas of their 1969 inaugural season road jerseys on July 6, 2019 against the 1969 Expos-clad Nationals who wore powder blue road uniforms, making this a road-on-road matchup. Amazingly, these jerseys, provided by the Nationals, are more accurate than the home ones the Royals made for themselves the year before. All adornment on these Majestic Cool Base gray jerseys is royal blue, including a very accurate rendition of the "Kansas City" script on front, knit trim around neck opening and at the sleeve ends (a little narrower than the original's), and Varsity numbers on back. The 1969 MLB 100th Anniversary patch properly adorns the left sleeve. Overall, a wonderfully rendered throwback of a classically-styled late-60's flannel jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Negro Leagues Tribute (1945 Kansas City Monarchs)

Steve Kraljic Collection

For a second time, the Royals throw back to these 1945 KC Monarchs road jerseys, this time, on August 10, 2019. Made here in Majestic Cool Base fabric, where the last version was made by AIS, and there are many differences throughout. The "MONARCHS" wordmark is radially arched in a yellow/blue serif font (the AIS was vertically arched and taller), while yellow/blue Block numbers adorn the back (Varsity for the AIS version). Blue/yellow/blue braid surrounds the neck opening, collar and placket area, and close to sleeve ends, similar to the 2003 AIS reproduction, but the pattern of the braid around the neck is different. This version also lacks the left-sleeve patch of the 2003 issue.

Above: Jackie Robinson and Satchel Paige on the 1945 Monarchs…imagine that.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23-25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Royals wear a white version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray with gray nickname on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020, 2022-2023 Negro Leagues Tributes (1945 KC Monarchs)

For their annual Negro Leagues Tribute games in 2020 (September 22), 2022 (August 13), and 2023 (September 16), the Royals return to a 1945 Kansas City Monarchs home uniform they last wore in 2004. Now made by Nike, this version is a very accurate representation of what the Monarchs wore, save for the Nike logo on the right chest (though the Royals have had very different interpretations of the Monarchs' 1945 uniforms over the years, as seen in previous pages). Here, a white Cool Base material jersey with blue pinstripes features huge "KC" lettering in red/blue on front, with red/blue player numbers on back and left pant leg in a distinctive font that looks like a cross between Varsity and McAuliffe. Blue/red/blue braid appears close to sleeve openings, around the neck and placket, and around the period-appropriate, but slightly inaccurate white sun collar (the original collars were striped). Red buttons complete the look. Note that the Royals paired this jersey with red caps in 2020 and white caps with braid matching the jerseys in 2022 and 2023.

Side-by-side, Hilton Smith (above left) and Nicky Lopez (above right) show how well these throwbacks represent the original uniforms.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Negro Leagues Tribute (1949 Kansas City Monarchs)

For their annual Negro Leagues Tribute game in 2021 on May 23, the Royals throwback to the 1949 Monarchs home look. They last wore this style in 2006. Now made by Nike, these white jerseys in full knit material have “Monarchs” spelled out in red on front in a fancy Tuscan font similar to the Red Sox and 1976-1981 White Sox. Varsity numbers reside on back in red, with red/white/red knit trim at sleeve ends and on the tops of the sleeves from the sleeve-end braid to the neck opening.

© GameWornGuides.com

Prototypes and Oddballs

1969 Spring Training Road?

You'll recall that Royals flannel road jerseys of 1969-1972 say "Kansas City" on the front. This road gray jersey at left was offered at auction. Its description was described as showing "light use" with the 1969 MLB sleeve patch "resewn." It was made by Spalding (the only Spalding-made Royals jersey in all my photo research), with 1969 tagging, and Spalding-style numbers on back. I wondered if it was a prototype, and this one may have been. I started to look for more, and over time I found these Wilson examples below. They have neither year tagging nor sleeve patches. I suspect that as the team started Spring Training in 1969, the road jersey may not have been finalized, and these were issued to players before the start of the regular season.

Photos of the Royals inaugural Spring Training from the major news services are practically non-existent. Baseball cards are a good source to find spring training uniforms, and it looks to me that several players may be wearing these gray uniforms, but it difficult to be certain given the color shifting and the poor printed quality of the cards. Notably, other players in the set are shown wearing the "Kansas City" script. jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 Prototype Home

Found for sale on eBay, this jersey caught my eye because it was a pullover without numbers on front, making it one of the early Royals double knit jerseys which are uncommon enough anyway.

But further investigation showed differences from the team's actual game uniforms. The sleeve trim is an applied wide knit trim, sewn on top of the sleeve, unlike the elastic sewn-in sleeve-end trim used on early knit game jerseys. Further, the V-neck trim is solid royal blue, not blue and white striped as it was on game uniforms.

But sealing the deal, the Wilson collar tag has the vertical line between the size and the wash instructions, which was last used in 1972. The Royals did not switch to knit uniforms until 1973, and all photo examples we have of early game worn jerseys in the files show the later tag without the vertical line.

Our educated assumption is that this is a prototype jersey that pre-dated the production jerseys used by the team. It is blank on back and the thread holding on the front script is well bleached from many washings.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 Prototype Home

Another likely prototype submitted for the club's consideration by Wilson, this pinstriped pullover has the 1973 team script, sewn in wide knit sleeve-end trim and V-Neck in blue/white/blue. The Wilson manufacturer tag in the neck is in the style last used in 1972. And as is typical of prototypes, a white twill tag printed with the manufacturing specifics of the design. Wilson produced a similar style pinstriped V-neck pullover with similar trim elements as this one, but in red instead of blue, for the White Sox - no doubt another prototype.

© GameWornGuides.com

Mid-1970s Prototype Road

This Wilson jersey was likely a sample of a new road jersey for the Royals. It has sewn on lettering front and back, and save for the blue outline around the lettering looks almost identical to the road jersey used 1973-1982. Notice that the number font is Wilson Varsity.

The Wilson size tag is the style used by that company 1974-1977. Therefore it is reasonable to assume that this prototype was developed after the team had already put the one-color lettered pullover knit jerseys into use in 1973. The white sample tag, with Wilson's internal codes for various manufacturing specifications, appears in the neck under the size tag.

Over the years, we have come across another example of this jersey, adding to the mystery.

© GameWornGuides.com

Late 1970s/Early 1980s Prototypes: Road Oddballs

We have no absolute confirmation on these jerseys' origin, but based on our experience, the presence of the squared white tag sewn inside the back collar is a common trait of Wilson prototypes. That tag is present on all three of these examples, though readability is impacted by varying degrees of wash wear.

The jersey has a silk screened front script and player numbers, which though unusual, may have been done for speed of creating the mockup. Notice also that the sleeve end striped trim is sewn on over top of the jersey sleeve ends; again looking very much like a rush job perhaps to quickly preview the appearance.

The white tag sewn in the collar is very faded on some examples, but the one at top right is very clear in the internal specs for the jersey. If not for the presence of this tag we would have discounted this jersey as a beer league issue. These jerseys have different codes than the "Kansas City" prototype of this era with sewn letters shown on an earlier page. It is possible that this was a lower-quality jersey, again, because time may not have allowed a better production, and this was used to judge the look rather than construction of the jersey. Of note, the Wilson size tag with size "M" we see on two of the three is atypical for pro issues as well, but again, it may have been a rush job. The style of the "Wilson" logo on the tag, however, was seen starting in the late 1970s, so we use that as a guide to dating these.

But now, the real mystery. Are these really three different jerseys? We believe they are. Note the different stitching patterns around each of the white sample tags. Moreover, close inspection of the back numbers shows that the spacing between the white and blue layers of silk screen is different on each version, indicating that they are all slightly different copies of the same jersey. Plus, two of them were for sale on eBay at the same time at one point, one in Michigan, and one in Pennsylvania.

Often, these are listed as Danny Jackson jerseys. Jackson, who played in the majors for 15 years, including the first five of his career in KC, was a good pitcher but one unlikely to have received the honor of this many replica, or even sample jerseys, made up for him. Thus, the use of the 25 on all of these is a mystery, unless the misprinting of two of the three versions is a clue to why at least this many versions of this identical jersey exist.

© GameWornGuides.com

1973 Prototype Road

Stephen Kraljic Collection

Here is another mysterious Royals jersey from the mid-1970s, likely dating from the team's 1973 switch to knit jerseys, and the introduction to powder blue on the road. Made by Sand-Knit, who also made Brewers and Braves jerseys at this time, this powder blue V-neck pullover has blue/white/blue trim at next and close to the sleeve-ends. "Royals" is spelled our in vertically arched letters on front, and player number "5" is on front and back, with all lettering in blue/white. Note the unusual treatment of the front number, centered beneath the team name. Though it is unusual for baseball, the Cubs did have a road jersey with this number placement in 1972, so it was not entirely unheard of. Sand-Knit tags can be inconsistent, but the tag featured here matches up well with other 1972 styles, which would likely have been the time this sample was being considered for use in 1973. In the end, neither Sand-Knit nor this style were adopted by the team.

© GameWornGuides.com

Spring Training Batting Practice Oddballs

White mesh Royals BP Jerseys show up occasionally in the hobby, advertised as game worn.

Here are three variants. These are almost certainly Spring Training jerseys used in practice, but probably not in games.

Bill Henderson Collection

© GameWornGuides.com

Oddballs

Hallmark Designer Shannon Manning proudly displays his finished art for the new Royals emblem. The three somewhat similar designs directly below show the evolutions of his design before the final choice, while other Hallmark artists' suggestions are below.

ROYALS called on Hallmark artists to pinch-hit in designing of emblem

Psychedelic steers and lantern-jawed sluggers vied with royal symbols In friendly competition to select a logo for Kansas City's new team.

Page 34 American League Scorebook

(Left) This full-page ad by Kansas City's own Hallmark Card Company trumpets that one of their own artists created the simple but long-lasting Royals emblem, which was still in use until 2001, unchanged after over three decades.

(Right) Story of how the Royals' road jerseys were stolen from the Brewers' clubhouse in 1977. The last paragraph strikes us as funny, showing that MLB jerseys were not commonly seen as collectibles at that time. Certainly these stolen jerseys are still floating around in the hobby today.

Royals Ripped Off Of Shirts, Gloves

MILWAUKEE (AP) — "You can't tell the players without a scorecard—or with one," said pitcher Jim Colborn of the Kansas City Royals.

Or was it Kansas City Brewers?

A thief—or thieves—broke into the visitors' clubhouse at County Stadium and made off with 53 Royals' uniform shirts, 20 gloves, 10 pairs of baseball shoes and 15 warmup jackets.

Thus all but seven of the Royals' crew of 25 players, four coaches and Manager Whitey Herzog had to wear Brewer road uniform tops for Sunday's game. Each Royal has two sets of road uniforms for a total of 60; now all but seven are missing.

Manager's Uniform

Those wearing complete Royals' uniforms included Colborn and catcher Darrell Porter, both of whom were traded by the Brewers to Kansas City last winter. Also having complete Kansas City uniforms were infielders George Brett, John Mayberry, Fred Patek and Pete LaCock and outfielder Tom Poquette.

"Hey, who wears this uniform for Milwaukee?" asked Royals' outfielder Amos Otis as he pulled a Brewers jersey bearing No. 2 over his head.

When told No. 2 belongs to Brewers Manager Alex Grammas, Otis asked whether Grammas had been a good hitter as a player.

Informed that Grammas had a .247 batting average for 10 major league seasons, Otis said, "Well, I'll get some hits today and make him look good."

"No, on second thought, I want No. 44, Hank Aaron's uniform that's on display in the window outside," Otis said.

The missing items included Otis' glove, only the second he has owned in his 13-year career.

"The first one my brother gave me in 1965," he said. "Galen Cisco Royals' pitching coach gave me the other one in 1973. If they really have to steal it, they can have it, but it did have sentimental value."

A Neat Job

Jim Csicinski, manager of the visitors' clubhouse at the stadium, said he discovered the burglary when he arrived at the locker room at 9:30 a.m. Sunday.

"I put my key in the lock and it wouldn't turn," he said. "Then I pushed the door, it was open, and I saw right away there were no jerseys. It was a very neat job. Every chair was in front of every locker, the same as we left them yesterday.

"Colborn's was the only shirt that wasn't stolen," he said. "It was kind of hidden. The other six I took home last night and washed."

Csicinski said there apparently is a market for "hot" major league uniforms. He said Royals' pitcher Andy Hassler told him that a young fan in Detroit had approached him and asked him to autograph a California Angels' jersey.

The Hartford Courant, June 13, 1977 Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner

© GameWornGuides.com

1986 (for 1987) Prototype Road

The inset photo shows Saberhagen pitching in 1986, and his jersey is clearly a Wilson one with the Wilson numerals and styled bold NOB.

We don't know for sure, but it is a good bet that this Rawlings road jersey is a 1987 prototype. Rawlings did not make the team uniforms in 1986; Wilson did. It is tagged 1986, but uses the odd-ball Rawlings tag seen on very few 1987-only Rawlings jerseys. It seems to lack the 1987 Rawlings sleeve embroidery that began in 1987. And while Rawlings did not have the team's business in 1986, Rawlings did indeed end up taking over making their uniforms in 1987. Oddly, the player number font is not the Rawlings font that was adopted for 1987, it is close (but not exactly) like the Wilson version then in use in 1986. But the player name font is Rawlings' own house vertical arch font that would come into use in 1987. And why Bret Saberhagen? The pitcher had been on the team for several years and was a popular player-- his long name also lent itself well to showing off the Rawlings' NOB font.

Like I said, this is guesswork, but it is very educated guesswork.

© GameWornGuides.com

1991 (for 1992) Prototype Road

This 1991 year-tagged Rawlings jersey is probably a prototype, prepared for the 1992 season, though it is odd to see a prototype with special player tailoring as this one has. Note that Rawlings never made this style jersey for the team: Russell was the maker when this style was adopted in 1992. .

Also notice the blue/white/ blue sleeve end and neck trim, details not present on the 1992 gray jersey that was eventually adopted for use.

Player NOB is a special vertically arched Rawlings Wide Block, as had been used up to this point for some Royals jerseys.

Special player tailoring, Velcro closures are odd to see on a prototype jersey, as these are generally made to show the team what the proposed style will look like "in the cloth."

© GameWornGuides.com

2001-2002 Prototype Alternate Vest

Stephen Kraljic Collection

Vests became popular in baseball again in the late 1990s into the early 2000s, and from 2002-2005, the Royals incorporated vests into their lineup despite having no previous history with them. They used vests on the road 2002-2005, and at home 2003-2005. Here we have a prototype alternate vest, and based on the history and tagging, it was likely considered as an option to join the two other vest styles of the time. The telltale “Player” “5” is used here as name (with nameplate) and number, with “5” being a common sample number and likely not representative of the year in this case. Russell tagging dates from 2000-2003. Oddly, there is no Russell logo on the jersey - prior to the addition of the MLB logo on the back of the collar it was usually in that spot, but it moved to above the armhole after 2000. Perhaps given the relative new addition of the MLB logo around the time this sample was made, the manufacturer logo had not yet found a new home. Ultimately, the Royals retained their sleeved blue alternates and did not add this style.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Prototype Road

The Royals updated their uniform set in 2006, removing the black 3D drop shadows from the lettering on all their jerseys. Here is a prototype of their 2006 road jersey. All the usual prototype signals are here, the size 46 jersey, the use of “Player” and the year (6 for 2006) on back, and the sample tagging, here reading ROY-GRY-RD-J-06 for Royals gray road jersey 2006. Note that the sample has no sleeve patch, but the eventual on-field jersey did, as is the Royals’ tradition.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Prototype Alternate

The Royals updated their uniform set in 2006, removing the black 3D drop shadows from the lettering on all their jerseys. Here is a prototype of a 2006 alternate jersey. All the usual prototype signals are here, the size 46 jersey, the use of “Player” and the year (6 for 2006) on back, and the sample tagging, here reading ROY-RYL-ALT-J-06 for Royals royal alternate jersey 2006. The “RYL-ALT” distinguished it from the team’s black alternate that was also adopted (and hardly ever worn) in 2006. Note that the sample has no sleeve patch, but the eventual on-field jersey did, as is the Royals’ tradition.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Prototype Batting Practice

The Royals updated their uniform set in 2006, removing the black 3D drop shadows from the lettering on all their jerseys. Here is a prototype of a 2006 batting practice jersey, identical in construction to what they wore 2003-2005, but without shadows on team name or player numbers. This style was approved and worn in 2006 before the team joined all others in MLB to update their BP template in 2007.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Prototypes: Trying to Decide What Shade of Blue to Use

When the process of selecting new styles for the team to wear on field gets down to the final contenders, the maker creates prototypes “in the cloth” for the team to consider. These two jerseys are identical except for the shade of blue of the fabric.

While neither of these very attractive samples were picked for the team to wear, It looks like the jersey color on the left was the 2012 winner!

© GameWornGuides.com

Honorable Mentions

Kansas City Royals Prank Prospect Kyle Zimmer With 'Old Guy' Uniforms/Friday, February 21, 2014 3:09 (text borrowed from Yahoo News article)

This is probably not how Kyle Zimmer wanted to start his career with the Royals.

The 22-year-old pitching phenom, who was the fifth overall pick of the 2012 draft, is attending his first Spring Training with the big league club.

When asked about his experience in Arizona, Zimmer let slip a phrase that some Kansas City players were not too happy with.

"So I'm still relatively new to it, but it's great just being around some of these old guys and picking up tidbits here and there as I can," he told MLB.com. "Just being around in the atmosphere of getting going is fun."

Old guys, eh? Kansas City's veterans took offense to those words, and as payback they got jerseys with "Old Guy" and "Real Old Guy" printed on the back.

"You've got to be careful around here what you say in the newspaper," said Kansas City 'old guy' James Shields. "You never know who's reading."

Left: In 1992, George Brett modified his JRB patches that year with a small, black "H" to honor his father Jack H. Brett, who also died in 1992.

Right: Aren't there two "A's" in "Kansas?"

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2007 Mike Sweeney Captain's "C"

Captain's patches are a more familiar element of hockey and football jerseys in U.S. sports, but there have been occasions where they've been worn by baseball players too.

Mike Sweeney served as Royals captain from 2003-2007 and wore a captain's "C" during those years. The letter appeared on the front right chest of his jersey, and followed the came color pattern as the rest of each jersey's lettering.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020 Unworn St. Patrick's Day

The Royals made up a set of 2020 St. Patrick's Day green jerseys that were never worn because of the COVID shutdown. Made by Nike, they were identical in style to the 2019 Majestic versions that came before, and the 2021 Nike versions of the year after. Even though the jerseys were not used on the field, they were signed by players and sold by the team online with MLB authentications noting that they were team issued and autographed.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020 and 2025: Alex Gordon Pine Tar Tributes

Gordon in 2019

2020 Tribute, all photos at left: Royals legend Alex Gordon retired at the end of the 2020 season. On September 26, 2020, his Royals teammates honored him by taking the field in jerseys that mimicked his trademark pine tar stain on the back. The pine tar was applied in the clubhouse before the game to each player and coach, while Gordon's jersey was left clean so he could "apply" the mark himself (see above). Several of Gordon's former teammates also paid tribute to him in the same way during the season's final weekend, including Mike Moustakas (Reds), Drew Butera (Rockies), as well as Matt Strahm, Eric Hosmer, and Tim Hill (Padres). The Royals jerseys were auctioned off, complete with stains, after the game.

2025 Tribute: At the suggestion of Royals star Bobby Witt, Jr., who occupies the locker once held by Gordon, the Royals again all donned Gordon's trademark pine tar for a game on June 14, 2025. This time, the tribute was to recognize Gordon's election to the Royals Hall of Fame, which was celebrated at a pregame ceremony that day.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Prototype Nike Vapor Premier Elite

During Spring Training in 2021, several Royals players tested out Nike's Vapor Premier Elite jersey template, in advance of its league-wide adoption in 2024. For most fans, the mix of jersey types was likely unnoticeable, but the appearance of Nike's long-rumored template for MLB made news among jersey aficionados.

There are several differences between the Flex Base and Vapor Premier Elite jerseys that can be seen in the photos here. The Vapor Premier Elite jerseys have small collar and sleeve trim inserts. For the Royals, the neck trim matched the jersey and blended in, and the sleeve trim was thin stripes of powder blue/white/royal blue. Its position at the very sleeve end, and the color difference with the team's Flex Base sleeve braid in white/powder blue was one giveaway of the new jerseys.

It is very hard to see on the Vapor Premier Elite jerseys, especially on a solid color vs. pinstripes, but Vapor Premier Elite has no underarm or side vents like Flex Base.

In addition, the back numbers on Vapor Premier Elite jerseys are perforated twill, similar to what the NBA has used on game jerseys for several years. It is very hard to see from the stands, but locker room photos make it more obvious.

Finally, the collar and button placket on Vapor Premier Elite jerseys are narrower than on Flex Base, which means that knit trim or braid in these areas appears closer together than on Flex Base jerseys. It also makes one other change much more noticeable - the MLB logo, which resides on the back of the collar of Flex Base jerseys, is much lower on Vapor Premier Elite. In fact, for teams with braid around the neck placket, like the Royals, it forces the logo below the trim.

Top row: The 2021 Vapor Premier Elite template (left) next to the traditional Flex Base (right). Note the difference in collar/sleeve end trim, perforated back numbers, and placement of MLB logo patch.

Above left: A closer view of a Vapor Premier's collar and cuff trim.

Above right: The perforated back numbers are much harder to see on-field, though they can still be visible in the right light. Vapor Premier Elite also lacks the underarm and side venting of Flex Base.

Bottom right*: A sighting of both styles of jerseys next to each other on field.*

© GameWornGuides.com

2023-2025 Salvador Pérez Captain's "C"

Captain's patches are a more familiar element of hockey and football jerseys in U.S. sports, but there have been occasions where they've been worn by baseball players too.

Catcher Salvador Pérez was named the Royals fourth captain (and second to wear a captain's "C") in a clubhouse ceremony before the team's Opening Day game on March 30, 2023. The three previous Royals captains, George Brett, Frank White, and Mike Sweeney, were on hand to present Pérez with a jersey emblazoned with the "C" on front right chest. The letter appeared on his home, road, alternate powder blue, alternate royal blue, and City Connect jerseys.

Left: All four Royals captains (l-r) Mike Sweeney, George Brett, Salvador Pérez, and Frank White during a ceremony awarding Pérez with his captain's "C" on March 30, 2023.

"It's an honor to be the captain of the Kansas City Royals," Pérez said. "...it's a special day. George Brett, Frank White, Mike Sweeney, the way they played the game, the way they taught us to play the game, have passion for the game, it's something I want to follow."

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Spring Training “Large” Names

One of the most visible and controversial changes that Nike’s Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template imposed for the 2024 season was the radical shrinking and arching of player names on jerseys. Across the league, name lettering changed to 2” letters, down from 2.8” to 3.6” according to MLB.

Above: A 2024 jersey with small name lettering for comparison.

The Royals, however, were unhappy with the look, and demanded that they keep their larger name lettering, which appeared on-field on three styles of their jerseys in Spring Training 2024 (including team photo day). Fans and the media took notice, the Royals shared the story of wanting the large letters, and like clockwork, MLB made them fall in line with the rest of the league in time for the start of the season.

Shown here are examples of the three styles that they used in spring with the larger letters and some photos of them in action. They are a symbol of a brief moment when a team pushed back and won when it came to resisting Nike’s drive toward standardization. In the end, the controversy from 2024 was so great, teams were allowed to return to 2023-size lettering for 2025, making these jerseys seem normal, despite being outliers in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Prototypes: Road/Road Alternate

In advance of the switch to Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) in the 2024 season, Nike made prototypes of jerseys on the new template for team review. By the point that these samples were made, teams had already seen some early drafts with many missing or incorrect details, just to get a sense of the materials and construction. However, many of the later samples, like the two shown here, were very close to what eventually appeared on the field in 2024. These Royals road and dark blue alternate versions are two such examples. In many ways they replicate the team's similar jerseys introduced a few years prior, just carried over to VPE, which meant that things like the original sleeve-end trim was now sewn into the edge of the sleeve instead of on it, and the team's sleeve patch was much lighter embroidery than before. The back numbers on these samples are also perforated, which was not an element of the earlier version. However, when appearing on-field in 2024, the perforations were included on the blue jersey, but not the gray one.

Note the sample information that is on the Nike tags, which read "ROYALS ROAD JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT" and "ROYALS ALT2 JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT", with 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples that were usually size 46. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the "DO9307-074" and "DO9307-495" text on the front tags mean. They are likely internal production codes, as all 2024 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

© GameWornGuides.com

Commemorative Patches

Royals Patches

1987, after July 3

- 1987, after July 3: Dick Howser Memorial.
- 1992, after May 12: JRB memorial on right sleeve for team president Joe Burke
- 1993, after August 1: EMK Ewing Kaufman memorial, team owner. As these are in the spot normally taken by the team disc patch, we wonder if these patches replace the team patch or simply cover it.
- 1993: right sleeve, 25 years
- 1995: MIK Muriel I. Kaufmann, wife of former owner, white or gray patch on right sleeve (all season).

1995

1992, after May12

1993, after August 1

1993

© GameWornGuides.com

2009

- 2009: Royals 40th Anniversary .
- 2011, June 17-19: Joplin memorial patch. Both the Royals and Cardinals wore patch during their interleague series that remembered the May 22 tornado that struck Joplin, Missouri killing more than 150 people. The patches featured an outline of the state of Missouri, both teams' logos and the words "TEAMS UNITE FOR JOPLIN." As the Royals already have patches on both sleeves, the Joplin patch was affixed to the left chest above the team, wordmark. Below left: notice also the right chest blue ribbon worn on Father's Day only, for cancer awareness).
- 2011, starting May 26: Following the death of Paul Splittorff, the all-time winningest pitcher in the history of the Kansas City Royals, as well as one of their color commentators, the team started wearing a black circular patch with "SPLITT" in white lettering.
- 2012: All Star game on right sleeve, white and gray backgrounds
- 2013, April 20: Royals wore Red Sox's "B Strong" patch during game at Boston following the Boston Marathon bombing.

June 17-19, 2011

2012 - home and road versions

April 20, 2013

2011, starting May 26

© GameWornGuides.com

- 2015, May 24: 1985 World series champions patch worn on right sleeve of light blue home jerseys.
- 2016: 2015 World Series Champions patch on all jerseys.
- 2017: ACE 30 patch for pitcher Yordano Ventura, killed in an off-season automobile accident in his home Dominican Republic.
- 2018: Royals 50th patch, left sleeve of all jerseys, replacing the team "KC" shield patch - four versions, one for each color of jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

- 2019, July 1: Canadian flag patch on right chest of dark blue alternate for Canada Day in Toronto
- 2020: DG memorial patch for former owner David Glass, right sleeve of all jerseys
- 2022: Memorial patch for longtime Royals front-office staffer Art Stewart, blue version for white and gray jerseys, white version for powder blue and royal blue jerseys
- 2024, May 24-26: Green mental health awareness ribbon for series in Tampa against the Rays, who wore the patch all month

© GameWornGuides.com

2024-2025 Royals Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Royals did not have an ad patch in 2023, but before the 2024 season, they struck a sponsor patch deal with QuickTrip, a convenience store chain. The patches first appeared in Spring Training 2024.

The patch is red with “QT” lettering in white/black 3D drop shadow on all of the team’s uniforms.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team’s typical sleeve patch takes residence on the opposite sleeve.

In 2023, the location of the team’s typical sleeve patches still varied depending on the handedness of each player, even though a sponsor patch did not appear until the following year.

© GameWornGuides.com

Royals Postseason Patches

2014 AL Wild Card
2014 AL Division Series
2014 AL Championship Series
(right sleeve)

2015 AL Division Series
2015 AL Championship Series
(right sleeve)

2014 World Series
(right sleeve)

2015 World Series
(right sleeve)

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Ken Wright 1973 Kansas City Royals Home Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: July 6, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0706J08

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson tagged size 48 marked and measured home pullover jersey most recently #51; originally numbered #28. White jersey body, "Royals" scripted at an angle across the front with an underline in Royal Blue. 2" knit blue/white/blue sewn in sleeve end trim, 1" in the same colors for its knit V-neck. 1972 was the Royals first year in knit jerseys, and the team recirculated all its MLB uniforms through spring training and its minor league clubs throughout the 1970s and beyond. In 1974, the year following this jersey's MLB service, the Royals had seven farm teams, of which five were named Royals. #51 was not issued by the Royals during the season for several years after 1973, so subsequent use was not deemed to be MLB regular season.

Ken Wright enjoyed a five year MLB career, playing four years for the Royals 1970-1973, and then briefly for the Yankees in 1974. In 1973 he appeared in 25 games, half as a starter, and compiled a 6-5 record with a 4.91 ERA, arguably the best year of his career.

Restoration Performed: As received, the numbers 51 had been stripped from the back by its owner, leaving behind a great deal of glue and ground in dirt. The sleeve patch was also detached, and the thread holding the Royals wordmark on front been stripped as it had been bleached white. The light table clearly revealed the presence of the outlines of the original numbers, 28. That number was issued to pitcher Ken Wright in 1973, and at 6' 2" 201 lbs this would have been a reasonable size for him to have worn. I recreated the back numbers from the Royals team patterns from my archives, and these exactly matched the ghosts on the jersey back. I media blasted the new number to make it match the sheen of the older, aged elements. I restitched the original front wordmark without removing it, and reapplied the same team patch on the sleeve directly over the original spot.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturers tag showing the size as 48 is attached in the center of the inside back of the neck. Beneath this is a 1" x 2" rectangle of jersey fabric with "73 Set 2" hand chain stitched in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher. Embroidered originally in blue thread, washing in bleach and detergents has turned the chain stitching a characteristically light pink.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Wear & Repairs: The jersey as received was in fair condition, aggressively cleaning the glue and ground in dirt, plus hand scrubbing and laundering brightened it considerably. It is in good original condition without rips or repairs; the trim is surprisingly unfaded by the sun. I have found that larger sized jerseys like this one often were spared the worst of minor league use because often they were too large to fit the average young player!

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good lightly restored condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by pitcher Ken Wright of the 1973 Kansas City Royals.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Jamie Quirk 1975 Kansas City Royals "Pre-Rookie" Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: July 21, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0721J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: As received, Wilson-made Kansas City Royals road Columbia Blue pullover jersey in size 46 (both marked and measured). Stretchy knit Royal/white/Royal sleeve ends and V-neck. "Kansas City" team wordmark vertically arched across the front in white. On back was a non-original single numeral "3" in white twill notably taller and less bold than the team template. Glue outlines of an earlier numeral "9" are visible, roughly 1/2" higher than the number on it as received, indicating a less-than-accurate restoration. Catcher Jaimie Quirk, 6' 3" and 200 lbs wore #9 for the 1975 Royals. (Harmon Killebrew wore #3 for the 1975 Royals. This is not his jersey.)

Quirk was a 1975 late season, September call-up for the Royals, and his scant 39 at-bats in 14 games did not qualify him for "rookie" status. He hit .256 with one home run in that short period. A versatile utility player, in an 18-year career he played for seven different teams, and notably he played for the Royals in three separate stints in ten different seasons. And while primarily a catcher, he played innings at every position during his career at every position except pitcher and center field.

Restoration Performed: Removal of the number from the back and subsequent examination on the light table confirm that this jersey was originally numbered with the the proper size and style "9". The Royals were a frugal organization and recycled nearly everything for reuse. Most likely after its use in 1975 spring training, likely again by Quirk, this jersey was stripped to prepare it for player future issue- spring training or emergency use. It does not appear that it was re-numbered to be used again, as it never received a new number on back prior to the incorrect number 3. This is unsurprising as larger sized jerseys often were spared reissue because they didn't fit the young players called to spring training. (I do not believe that the #3 on it when I received it was from the 1980s, no other player who had been issued #3 by the Royals would have been large enough to have worn a size 46 from 1975 until the end of use of this style jersey in spring training 1983.)

I recreated the number for the back from team patterns to exactly match the ghost of the original digit, aging/dyeing it mildly to match the patina of the rest of the jersey. I stitched it precisely to cover the original marks, sewing with appropriately colored off-white thread. While I steamed the jersey, a light table evaluation will still show scant traces of the presence of that incorrect number 3 from the earlier re-numbering.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson size 46 tag, correct style for 1975, is stitched into the back of the neck, showing some wear/fraying to its edges from abrasion with the player's neck. Less than an inch below it is a jersey-fabric color tag about 2 inches long and 3/4" high, slightly trapezoidal in shape (angled ends) with "75 46" hand chain-stitch embroidered in blue thread in the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher. The tag is zig-zag stitched to the back, center of the neck above the number and just below the Wilson tag. While nearly all 1975 jerseys had a simple square with "75" hand chain stitched on it, I have seen at least one other example of a 1975 Royals road jersey (notably, also a large size) with a longer-style strip tag like this one in the neck.

Top, as received with a replacement number on back. Below, the number removed and a light table view of the shadow highlights showing the original number.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Jaimie Quirk of the 1975 Royals.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

John Wathan 1981 Kansas City Royals Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: October 13, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0813J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: As received, Wilson-made Kansas City Royals road Columbia Blue pullover jersey in size 44 (both marked and measured). Stretchy wide knit Royal/white/Royal sleeve ends and V-neck. "Kansas City" team wordmark vertically arched across the front in white. Royals disk patch sewn to the left sleeve. On back is the original numbers "12" in white twill matching the team template. On the light table, the outlines of the original name on back of catcher John Wathan are clearly visible, rendered in the Royals' unique hand-drawn vertical arch font on the 1980s.

John Wathan spent his entire baseball career with the Royals, starting with ten-years as catcher with the Royals 1976-1985. In 1981 he appeared in 89 games batting .252, missing most of two months of that season with injury. After retirement as a player following the 1985 season, Wathan coached for the Royals in 1986 before becoming the manager of Kansas City's AAA Omaha Royals farm club. He was promoted to manager for the big-league Royals on August 28, 1987. He managed five seasons in Kansas City, having two winning seasons in 1988 and 1989 and finishing second in the American League West both times. (Wikipedia)

Restoration Performed: I recreated the name for the back from team lettering patterns and then tuned it to exactly match the ghost of the original name on back, aging/dyeing it to match the patina of the rest of the jersey. I stitched it precisely to cover the original marks, sewing with appropriately colored off-white thread. The original front wordmark was re-sewn in bleached thread as was nearly detached in many places.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson size 44 tag, correct style for 1981, is stitched into the back of the neck, showing some wear/fraying to its edges from abrasion with the player's neck. A simple jersey-fabric knit square with "81" hand chain stitched on it is stitched to the outer front left tail, matching exemplars. No other player or set tagging was generally used in 1981.

Wear & Repairs: As received this jersey was very dirty from use, with ground in reddish dirt on the stomach and chest. I was able to brighten it considerably with pre-soaking, scrubbing and washing. The white twill lettering is stained to a shade of ivory from wash water. The name on back had been roughly removed leaving a few extraneous holes. The Royals routinely stripped player names from team jerseys at the end of the season so that the prior year equipment could be re-issued to new players in spring training if needed. Many were sent to the minors leagues for additional use. This jersey has been clearly well-used with a life that extended beyond its original year of issue in 1981.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

As received , the jersey was missing its name on back and was very dirty. Several rips were repaired in the fabric where the original name had been roughly removed. Here, the light table reveals the jersey's history.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition: the front and the back numbers are all original, and the back is properly restored with player NOB lettering identical to original and exactly coving the original ghosts. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by catcher John Wathan of the 1981 Kansas City Royals.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Document of Restoration

Examination Date: September 4, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0904J01

This is not an opinion of authentication; it is simply a documentation of a restoration performed.

Description: Columbia Blue Wilson seven-button Kansas City Royals pro model road jersey, size 42. Back and front numbers 29 intact, name on back had been removed leaving a very clear ghost stitching image. Year tagged "83".

Restoration Performed: Replaced removed name on back exactly covering the original ghosts. The Royals regularly stripped player names from player jerseys at the end of the season in preparation for sending the used jerseys to the minor leagues for the next year, or perhaps to be re-used in spring training. Besides having its NOB removed, this one showed evidence of having had a nameplate sewn over top of that spot on the back. Threads from its removal remained, and the fabric beneath that nameplate shows slightly darker from less exposure to sunlight.

The new NOB fabric was media blasted to remove the sheen and lightly dyed to make it better match the numbers, then sewn with matching ivory thread for an authentic restoration.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Gaylord Perry 1993 KC Royals Game Worn- "Final MLB Season" Road Jersey

Examination Date: February 23, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0223J08

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Kansas City Royals Wilson-made year tagged 1983, size 46 Kansas City Royals Columbia Blue six-button road jersey. 2" wide knit sewn-in sleeve end trim, Royal/white/Royal. Similarly striped 1" trim around the neck. Royals disk patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Perry's number 36 is stitched on the left chest and centered on the back, with his name arched above. Player name and number are clearly hand-cut from off-white twill and are stitched somewhat sloppily to the jersey with stitches that are far too close together to match standard team issue. The lettering is inexact in shape, the name on back is standard radial arch style instead of the team-standard vertical arch, and the thread used to stitch it in place is tan instead of off-white. Normally I would consider this to be a poor attempt at an amateur customization and would close the book and move along. However:

Perry was in the 22nd (and final) year of his career at the start of the 1983 season, and had been signed by the Seattle Mariners. After a 3-10 start, on June 26 the Mariners designated him for assignment, and the Kansas City Royals picked him on a waiver claim ten days later. Therefore he joined the Royals' mid-season, and was pitching for the Royals just a few days after he was signed. It is reasonable that rather than waiting for Wilson to stitch uniforms for him at the factory and send them, a set of first jerseys were created from extra stock in the clubhouse. Clubhouse-lettered jerseys are often much less professional in appearance than those lettered by the contracted maker. My supposition is backed up by very clear photos of Perry wearing arguably this same jersey, with its inexact front lettering, too-tight-spaced stitching and inconsistent style of name on back. The close-up photos also shows several stray threads on the lettering and one coming from the buttonhole that match the jersey in review. While I do not provide photo matching, I can reference Getty Images 50950480, 115272610, 1073501732 and 115272646 that show the relevant details. I have shown here photos that can be compared to these exemplars.

During a 22-year career, with most of its second half spent with losing teams, Perry compiled 314 wins; upon his retirement, he ranked third in major league history with 3,534 strikeouts. with his 690 games started placing him behind only Cy Young's 815. His 5,350 innings pitched ranked fourth; he had been the first right-handed pitcher since the 1920s to surpass 5,000 innings. He was the last pitcher to throw 300 complete games, and was then the eighth-oldest pitcher ever to start a major league game. Perry was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1991 in his third year of eligibility, a delay widely regarded as resulting from his career-long controversies. (Wikipedia)

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Matching exemplars for the 1983 season, the Wilson tag correct for that year is stitched on the outer left front shirt tail. A 1" square of jersey fabric is zig-zag stitched below it, with the two-digit year "83" hand chain stitched in the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good original condition. It is free of rips or repairs, and the lettering has been burnished to a matte finish from many uses on the field and trips through the washing machine. It has its original six buttons. The lettering is somewhat puckered from washing and probably also from improper application.

Note that I am not a provider of photo-matching services, and this should not be considered as such. But aspects of this jersey, especially the shape and placement of the front numbers, the stitching frequency and the visibility of threads, as well as the non-standard radial arched NOB can all likely be photo-matched to licensable photos of Perry pitching in 1983.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good original condition. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and was game worn by Gaylord Perry of the 1983 Kansas City Royals.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Bo Jackson Autographed 1990 Kansas City Royals Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: August 25, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0825J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Rawlings six button Bo Jackson #16 white Kansas City Royals home jersey. Tagging sewn inside the left front tail shows the size as 48 with special tapered tailoring. Royals with underline in Royal Blue across both panels of the chest. 1" Royal/white/Royal knit trim sewn in at the ends of the sleeves and ringing the collar opening. On front left and on back is Jackson's #16. Name on back in the correct vertical arched font for the year. A critical evaluation of the player name and number lettering shows that it follows the team template exactly. Sewn on the left sleeve is the Royals' disk patch. The jersey is autographed by Jackson in black Sharpie on the left front, below the front number. I have no professional opinion on the autograph.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: As the official supplier of uniforms to MLB, Rawlings was entitled to have its logo script branding showing on team jerseys, embroidered in blue at the end of the right sleeve. The white Rawlings locker tag with red/white/blue embroidery and three lines of wash instructions appropriate for use in 1990 . It is stitched on all four sides to the inside of the left front tail. A flag tab reading "SET 1 1990" is pinch-sewn under the right side, and directly above it is a small satin rectangle of fabric with the letter "T" machine embroidered on it. The jersey is 24" wide under the arms, and narrows to 22"at the waist, which is correct for the tailoring designation. All tagging is still crisp and unpuckered from much washing. Team tagging matches exemplars, and the jersey size is reasonable for Jackson to have worn, again matching exemplars.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in excellent original condition. It is free of rips or repairs, and the lettering is still crisp and unfurnished or faded from much use. It has its original six buttons. All of the thread holding the front script and numbers on place is tight and unfaded. There are a few small dirt marks, a set of small marks that could be pine tar on the top of the right shoulder and a few small fabric scuffs. There is dirt rubbed into the elastic trim at the end of the left sleeve below the Royals disk patch.

Bo Jackson was a media sensation and his game worn jerseys have always been in great demand by collectors. While this jersey exhibits some signs that it could have been worn in a few games, it is important to note that Jackson also was represented by Score Board Inc. which produced team issue-style jerseys for him to autograph, including his special "T" tapered tail tagging. Score Board was an innovator: a first-of-its-kind venture designed to provide team-issue specification jerseys to meet collector demand. There was no attempt made then to distinguish between Score Board issued jerseys and ones actually team issued and worn by players.

Conclusion: The autographed jersey in review is in excellent lightly used condition showing marks typical of game use. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging and reflects player-specific tailoring. It is offered without provenance, it is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for Bo Jackson of the 1990 Kansas City Royals.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Kirk Gibson Game Worn Autographed 1991 KC Royals Home Jersey

Examination Date: December 27, 2021 Certification Number: 21-1227J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is Kirk Gibson's 1991 Kansas City Royals set 1 home jersey. Rawlings tail tagging, size 46. White, six-button jersey body with Royals and underline in Royal Blue across both panels of the chest. 1" Royal/white/Royal knit trim sewn in at the ends of the sleeves and ringing the collar opening. On front left and on back is Gibson's #30. His name on back has been restored in the correct vertical arched font for the year. Sewn on the left sleeve is the Royals' disk patch. Notably on this jersey the back numbers are only 7" from the edge of the collar, normally they are 8" to make room for the name above, but this one is spaced unusually closely. The jersey is autographed by Gibson in blue Sharpie on the right front, below the team script. I have no professional opinion on the autograph.

In his 17-year playing career, Gibson was a member of the Royals a single season. He was best remembered for twelve seasons with the Tigers and three with the Dodgers, including his memorable game winning post season home run in the 1988 World Series.

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey was missing its player name on back, typical of the Royals jerseys of this period who routinely stripped player names from the backs of all team jerseys at the end of the season, typically sending them to the minor leagues for another year or two of use.

Using team templates as a starting point, then the light table scanned images, replacement lettering identical in both shape and placement to Gibson's original 1987 issue were cut from the proper shade of Royal Blue tackle twill and then the lettering was mildly media blasted and organically dyed to harmonize its appearance to the rest of the jersey. The lettering was placed with aid of the light table exactly covering the original ghosts, and stitched with matching bleached thread. The shadow outlines from the

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

original Gibson player name lettering, as well as the ghost stitched outline of a removed nameplate, remain beneath the restored lettering and can be seen in the photos on this page.

While not offered as a positive photo match, Gibson in 1991 is wearing a home jersey indistinguishable from this one in Getty Images photo 536611160. Note the identical size and spacing of the name on back, as well the higher than usual placement of the back numbers. It is possible that the jersey in the photo is this one.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: As the official supplier of uniforms to MLB, Rawlings was entitled to have its logo script branding showing on team jerseys, embroidered at the end of the right sleeve. The white Rawlings locker tag with red/white/blue embroidery and in the correct style for 1991 is stitched on all four sides to the outside of the left front tail. A flag tab reading "SET 1 1991" is pinch-sewn under the right side, and directly below is a small satin rectangle of fabric with "2 inch extra length" printed on it in blue. The jersey is 36" in length, which is correct for the tailoring designation. All tagging is slightly faded and puckered from washing. Team tagging matches exemplars, and the jersey size is reasonable for Gibson to have worn.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in good to very good original condition. It is free of rips or repairs, and the lettering has been burnished to a matte finish from many uses on the field and trips through the washing machine. It has its original six buttons. Some of the thread holding the front script and numbers on place has failed and there are some loose threads and slight fraying in the places where the fabric experiences the most wear, in daily use. The name on back of the jersey has been accurately restored as described prior. I would suggest that this jersey was used in the minor leagues or in spring training for another year or so after its major league service had ended.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition: the front is all original, and the name on back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and was game worn by Kirk Gibson of the 1991 Kansas City Royals.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

George Brett 1993 Kansas City Royals Autographed Road Professional Model Jersey

Examination Date: February 7, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J18

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Russell gray, full-weight knit, six button road jersey, 1993 tagged and lettered for #5, George Brett. Sewn-in Royal/white/ Royal Blue 1-1/4" knit sleeve end trim. All lettering is Royal Blue tackle twill outlined with white , "Royals" scripted across the front and underlined. The Royals team disk patch is stitched to the left sleeve; on the right sleeve is the 1993-only Royals 25th patch. The number 5 is sewn on the left panel below the team crest and also is sewn centered on the back. Player name "BRETT" radially-arched on back above the number. 1993 was the first year for Royals road jerseys to switch from vertical arched to radially arched player names. The jersey is autographed by Brett on the back, to the right of the number, in black marker. I have no opinion of the authenticity of the autograph. Notably, this jersey does not have the EMK memorial disk replacing the team disk on the left sleeve, a change that was made for all on-field jerseys after the first week in August 1993. 1993 was Brett's 21st and final season in a Hall of Fame career spent entirely with the Kansas City Royals.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell "R" logo is embroidered in blue at the end of the right sleeve. The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is stitched to the bottom outside of the front left tail, showing the size as 44. There is no flag-size tag in the collar, and instead there is a small flag tab on which is printed 100% Polyester pinch-sewn under the bottom of the locker tag. These last two characteristics designate jerseys made to team specification rather than those made for retail sale. Finally, pinch sewn around its perimeter below and on the left side of the locker tag is a white double knit tag with black plastisol ink screened on it, "5 BRETT SET 4 1993". I will observe this about the tagging: The style of Russell Diamond Collection tag is one that went into use very late in the 1993 season, maybe even after the season ended, and wasn't commonly seen until 1994. All game-used Royals 1993 jerseys in my library use the earlier tag, as well as being made of Intera Fabric, also noted with a separate identifying flag tag. Intera Fabric was used exclusively in 1992-1993, 1994 jerseys switched to 100% polyester. The "Set 4" tagging designation is unusual, as all the other examples save one in my library are tagged set 1 or 2.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitched elements are original and uncontrived. The jersey does not show obvious signs of wash or wear. All stitching, twill and tags are tight, crisp, unfaded and unblemished. There is a small fabric pull near the locker tag at the side seam.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is correctly team lettered and prepared with team-issue style tagging. It is clear that it was stitched by Russell in the same manner and place as other team jerseys. The fact that it displays several variances from 1993 game worn: the Russell tag usually seen on post-1993 jerseys, the uncommon Set 4 tagging, the 100% Polyester tag/jersey construction vs. the Intera Fabric one, and the lack of the EMK memorial patch, coupled with its lack of wear suggest to me that this is a team-specification/issue, pro-model jersey made for a post-1993 season/player post-retirement signing event.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Frank White 1983 Kansas City Royals Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: June 20, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0620J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: As received, Wilson-made Kansas City Royals road Columbia Blue button-front jersey in size 42 (both marked and measured). Stretchy wide knit Royal/white/Royal sleeve ends and V-neck. Linen lines the placket as is correct in period-correct Wilson professional issues. Royals-script team wordmark in white slanted across the front with an underline. Royals disk patch sewn to the left sleeve. On back is the original numbers "20" in white twill matching the team template. On the light table, the outlines of the original name on back of infielder Frank White are clearly visible, rendered in the Royals' unique hand-drawn vertical arch font on the 1980s. Also visible is the stitching ghost of a removed nameplate that went from shoulder to shoulder. There is notable wear inside the back of the collar with some minor separation of the cloth, someone has written "Frank White" in very tiny letters in blue pen inside the collar, this is almost certainly not a team marking. There are a couple of small holes in the sides of the jersey under the left arm that look like they may have been made with a blade or sharp instrument. The knit sleeve end trim and collar trim has faded slightly.

At 5' 11" and 170 lbs., Frank White wore size 42 jerseys throughout his career, and the size is reasonable for a man of his stature. In 1983, White appeared in 146 games for the Royals batting .260 with 11 home runs. In an 18-year career, all with the Royals, A five-time All-Star player, White was considered one of the best defensive second basemen of his era, winning eight Gold Glove Awards between 1977 and 1987.He was the first American League (AL) second baseman to win the award eight times.Although he was recognized more for his solid defensive play, he posted a .545 batting average during the 1980 American League Championship Series to be named the Most Valuable Player of the series.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson size 42 tag, correct style for 1983, is stitched onto the lower outside left tail, A simple jersey-fabric knit square with "83" hand chain stitched on it is stitched to the outer front left tail, matching exemplars on file. No other player identification or set tagging was generally used in 1983.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

As received , the jersey was missing its name on back and was very dirty. A small slice is visible in the fabric above the letter "E" in the fabric where the original name had been roughly removed. Here, the light table reveals the jersey's history. The left image is a negative, the dark outlines are actually lighter areas where the light can pass through the stitching holes. The ghost outline of a wide and long nameplate is also visible.

Wear & Repairs: As received this jersey was in very good condition, without undue wear or staining. As is typical, the white twill lettering is stained to a shade of ivory from wash water. The name on back had been roughly removed leaving a few extraneous holes. The Royals routinely stripped player names from team jerseys at the end of the season so that the prior year equipment could be re-issued to new players in spring training if needed. Many were sent to the minors leagues for additional use. This jersey has been clearly used with a life that extended beyond its original year of issue in 1983.

Restoration Performed: Using the light table to discover the original name on back, I recreated the name for the back from team lettering patterns and then tuned it to exactly match the ghost of the original name on back, aging/dyeing it to match the patina of the rest of the jersey. I stitched it precisely to cover the original marks, sewing with appropriately colored off-white thread. I touched up the stitching on the vertical center strokes of the back numbers, the usual place that they show wear in game use and start to become detached.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition: the front and the back numbers are all original, and the back is properly restored with player NOB lettering identical to original and exactly coving the original ghosts. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Frank White of the 1983 Kansas City Royals.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

George Brett 1984 Kansas City Royals Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: June 21, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0621J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Kansas City Royals Wilson-made, year tagged 1984, size 42 Kansas City Royals Columbia Blue six-button road jersey. 2" wide knit sewn-in sleeve end trim, Royal/white/Royal. Similarly striped 1" trim around the neck. Royals disk patch is sewn to the left sleeve. The inside of the placket is fully lined with linen as is typical of Wilson professional model button front jerseys of the 1980s. Brett's number 5 is stitched on the left chest and centered on the back, with his name hand-crafted by the Wilson artist, vertically-arched above. Player name and number are cut from white twill and stitched in place with a tight, neat zig-sag stitch. The number fonts used are exactly correct in the variant of the Wilson Varsity font unique to the Royals. Brett wore exclusively size 42 jerseys until near the very end of his career.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Matching exemplars for the 1984 season, the Wilson tag correct for that year is stitched inside the back of the neck: on other game examples the tag is on the left front tail, but this placement is an reasonably acceptable variant for Wilson jerseys of this time. That Wilson tag is correctly stitched in place without its stitching showing through to the outside back neck of the jersey. This means it was secured in place before the placket was sewn closed. A small 1" square of jersey fabric is zig-zag stitched below it, with the two-digit year "84" hand chain stitched in blue. Notice that the "84" tag is slightly different from 1984 Royals exemplars in our photo collection, the "8" on this one is chain stitched in a figure-eight, compared to other examples where the "8" is constructed of two circles on top of each other. I surely have not seen every example of 1984 Royals tagging—but I can attest to this same formation of the "8" on other 1984 Wilson jerseys in my exemplar library, and I have provided some examples of these. Keep in mind that these tags were embroidered by hand by a person (or persons), done freehand. In my experience, when multiple extra jerseys were made for a star player in a year for the purpose of auctioning them or giving them as gifts, they are usually not made as part of the run for the team jerseys created for all players at the start of the season. Rather they are managed separately and may have unique characteristics like this one shows.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all of the stitched elements on this jersey are original and without contrivance. This jersey is in very good original condition. It is free from damage or repairs, and the lettering has been lightly burnished and is very slightly puckered from hot water washing. It has its matching set of six original gray buttons. The linen lining inside the back of the collar and the placket is slightly dirty and puckered from use and wash. This jersey definitely does not show a full season worth of use. And that is not surprising, even though the collectible jersey hobby was not very mature in 1984, Brett was a local hero— and from the number of reasonably authenticated game jerseys attributed to him in the early 80s, he likely was issued multiple jerseys that he wore for a short period of time before they intentionally were cycled out to became collectibles like this one. Typically, Royals jerseys from this period of time were used for the full season by the player and then had their names stripped off and they were cycled to the minor leagues. This one clearly avoided that process.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Steve Crawford 1991 Kansas City Royals Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: July 10, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0710J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Rawlings-made Kansas City Royals road Columbia Blue button-front jersey in size 48 (marked but measured as a tapered size 46. 36" length reflects extra length tailoring). Stretchy narrow-style 1" knit Royal/white/Royal sleeve ends and V-neck. Royals-script team wordmark in white slanted across the front with an underline. Small supplemental Velcro closure is added on the front beneath the "Y" in Royals. Royals disk patch sewn to the left sleeve. On back and on left front are the original numbers "28" in white twill matching the team template. On the light table, the outlines of the original name on back of pitcher Steve Crawford are clearly visible, rendered in the Royals' vertical arch font of the 1990s. The knit sleeve end trim and collar trim has faded very slightly and is minimally puckered from hot water washing and use.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings size 48 tag, correct style for 1991, is stitched onto the lower outside left tail, a flag tab, "SET 1 1991" is pinch sewn under the top right edge of the tag. Pinch sewn along the bottom edge is a with tab that says "2 inch extra length". This tagging matches exemplars of Royals jersey of 1991. No additional player designated tagging was used. Rawlings script is embroidered in white on the right sleeve end, a practice that began in 1987.

Wear & Repairs: As received this jersey was in very good condition, without damage, undue wear or staining. As is typical, the white twill lettering is stained to a shade of ivory from wash water. The name on back had been carefully removed leaving no significant holes. The Royals routinely stripped player names from team jerseys at the end of the season so that the prior year equipment could be re-issued to new players in spring training if needed. Many were sent to the minors leagues for additional use. This jersey has been clearly used with a life that extended beyond its original year of issue in 1983. There is fabric pilling that has occurred beneath the "O" in Royals on front, this was caused by the velcro closure abrading the adjoining fabric in the wash.

Restoration Performed: Using the light table to discover the original name on back, I recreated it from team lettering patterns and then tuned it to exactly match the ghost of the original, aging/dyeing it to match the patina of the rest of the jersey. I stitched it precisely to cover the original marks, sewing with appropriately colored off-white thread. I touched up the stitching on the vertical center strokes of the back numbers, the usual place that they show wear in game use and start to become detached.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Chapter 36
Washington Senators
Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Senators Uniform History Notes

- The Washington team had been officially known as ”Senators” since 1956, and “The Nationals” prior to then dating back to 1901. However, they were nicknamed “Senators” in 1905 and that name was used interchangeably to refer to them throughout their history.
- The history of baseball in Washington D.C. is complicated and even confusing. The “original” Washington Nationals/Senators (1901-1960) moved to Minneapolis/St. Paul to become the Minnesota Twins for the 1961 season. The 1961 Senators were an all-new expansion team that started play immediately after the departure of the original team to Minnesota, and played 11 seasons, through 1971. For 1972, this team moved to Arlington, Texas to become the Texas Rangers.
- So, by 1970, the beginning date of this volume, the American League Senators were nearing the end of their life. This chapter details the 1970-1971 uniforms of the “expansion” Washington Senators franchise.
- The Senators were not a successful or well-run team, by most accounts. Quoting Wikipedia: “For most of their existence, the new Senators were the definition of futility, losing an average of 90 games a season. The team's struggles led to a twist on a joke about the old Senators - ‘Washington: first in war, first in peace and still last in the American League.’” Frank Howard, known for his towering home runs, was the team's most accomplished player, winning two home run titles.
- The Senators final uniforms featured on the following pages were a handsome model of tradition and simplicity. The Senators never played a game in double knit uniforms, the changeover to knits happened concurrent with the move to become the Texas Rangers. However, prototypes exist of what were to be the team’s possible knit 1972 uniforms had they stayed. These are presented in this chapter. There were never any Senators batting practice jerseys either.
- After the team’s demise, the Twins, Rangers, and Nationals all resurrected the Senators’ memory in several Turn Back the Clock games. These games’ uniforms are included in this chapter as well.
- After a 33 season absence, Major League Baseball returned to Washington D.C., as the 2005 National League Washington Nationals, the re-named Montreal Expos who departed Montreal after the 2004 season.
- The Nationals adopted the Senators’ “curly W” logo for their cap insignia, and later would adopt the same logo as their primary mark to go on the left chest of nearly all their jerseys. Strong management and good trades established the Nationals as a perennial contender in the National League, and in 2019, the team brought Washington its first World Series title since 1924.

I am always looking for new information and better photographs. If you can share new information, or offer corrections to this material, please send a note to me, at gamewornguides@gmail.com.. Please tell me which page you are referencing. All contributors will be recognized by name in a future edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Year by Year Summary

Senators Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1970	Home flannel	No	2 color Senators-specific Varsity	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road flannel	No	2 color Senators-specific Varsity	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1971	Home flannel	No	2 color Senators-specific Varsity	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road flannel	No	2 color Senators-specific Varsity	No	-	-	-	Wilson

1968-1971 (1969 shown)

1963-1971

© GameWornGuides.com

Of Note: The 2005-2025 Washington Nationals

From their first year in 2005, the Washington Nationals increasingly have adopted uniform elements of the old Washington Senators. In their first several seasons, 2005-2010, they used the Senators' "curly W" as their cap logo. It became the wordmark on team batting practice jerseys starting in 2007. In 2009, the team added a red alternate game jersey with the W as the front chest wordmark. In 2011, the "W" became the team's official primary wordmark, and the W was added to the team's sleeve patch, replacing the interlocked "DC" that had been used since the team's first season. That same year, the team's new white home jersey and alternate blue jersey also adopted the curly W as the front wordmark.

As of this 2025 printing, while the curly W has been somewhat deemphasized in recent years in favor of a script "Nationals" wordmark, it is still the team's official wordmark and remains a prominent feature on almost all the team's on-field looks, as either a chest logo or cap/patch insignia.

2011-2023 2011-2021 2011-2019

2025

© GameWornGuides.com

Home, Road, and Alternate Jerseys

1970-1971 Home

The Washington Senators' 1970-1971 home jersey was cream colored flannel, made by Wilson. The first year of this specific jersey style's use was 1968. The prior 1963-1967 home jersey had the same team wordmark on front, but the fabric was a cream with a navy blue chalk mark pinstripe.

All lettering is sewn two-color tackle twill. These uniforms are very plain and unadorned, without sleeve or neck trim, and without sleeve patches.

The back of the jersey features player numbers only, no names. The font used for player numbers is a Senators specific version of Block, a variant that followed the team to Texas when the team became the Rangers in 1972.

Surviving Senators jerseys are very rare, as the frugal team took the final sets of uniforms with them and stripped them of lettering to create the first Texas Rangers Spring Training uniforms, as noted later in this chapter.

1971

1971

David Parlet Collection

1970

© GameWornGuides.com

1970-1971 Road

The Senators' road uniforms for 1970-1971 are identical to the home jersey, save for the gray color of the fabric. The road jersey is a heavy gray flannel. All lettering is sewn two-color twill. This specific style of road jersey was introduced for the 1963 season.

Left: All team accessories (caps, helmets, socks, undersleeves) are changed to red for the 1968 season.

Right: In the prior era (1963-1967), while the uniform jersey and pants were the same, all accessories were navy blue (manager Gil Hodges circa 1966).

© GameWornGuides.com

Special Events Jerseys

Other Teams Appearing as the Senators in Turn Back The Clock Games

The Senators, of course, never held a Turn Back the Clock game, but three other MLB Teams have appeared in the Washington Senators uniforms (or the Washington Nationals as they were officially known prior to 1956) a total of eight times between 1994 and 2016.

Recall the original Washington Senators moved to Minnesota to become the Twins for the 1961 season. The Minnesota Twins have appeared as the Washington Nationals Senators once, in a 2001 game.

The Texas Rangers, the second team to have stolen the Senators from Washington, have appeared as the Senators three times, most recently as 2008. The first time, in 1994, deserves an asterisk, as the TBTC uniforms worn by the Rangers were “Senators Inspired” in an odd mashup that you’ll see on the next page.

The reborn Washington Nationals returned to the nation’s capital in 2005, and have appeared as the Senators four times since then, most recently in 2012.

© GameWornGuides.com

Rangers: 1994 Turn Back the Clock to the 1960s

- The Rangers hosted the Twins on May 8, 1994.These navy blue chalk-pinstripe flannels look very much like 1961 expansion Washington Senators jerseys, fitting because the Rangers were born from the Senators when that team deserted Washington after the 1971 season.
- To meet the Rangers' wishes, Mitchell & Ness designed jerseys that said "Rangers" on the front, but looking like the last Senators uniforms, even though the Rangers never wore jerseys that looked like these.
- The Twins wore 1965 gray flannels by Mitchell & Ness.
- Script and numbers are sewn in two-color, red with navy blue outlining.

Left: 1966 Washington Senators Uniform. Note that the Senators used the same unusual number font was used on the early Rangers home uniforms,with the odd-ly-shaped #1! It is very likely that the team continued to use the same lettering house even after the team moved to Texas from Washington.

This page also appears in the Texas Rangers chapter and team edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Twins: 2001 Turn Back the Clock to 1901 Washington Senators

(Left) The managers exchange line-ups at home plate and look just like it is 100 years ago, ummm– except for the shoes…

(Right) Notice cut off sleeves of this jersey; probably outfielder Matt Lawton could not stand wearing these, and choose a scissors over originality.

The Twins were the "original" Washington Senators/Nationals, who picked up and moved to Minneapolis and became the Twins for the 1961 season. Therefore, it is legitimate for the 2001 Twins to have appeared as the 1901 Senators in a TBTC contest, where they played the 1901 Athletics who also wore flannel.

Game held May 26, 2001. Mitchell & Ness flannels with all felt lettering. Note the Red Sox style numbers used on the back - though in reality, players did not wear numbers in 1901.

This page also appears in the Minnesota Twins chapter and team edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Rangers: 2002 Turn Back the Clock to 1961 Washington Senators

Bill Henderson Collection

- Billed as "The Triumphant Glory Series*," the Rangers played the A's July 27 and 28, 2002. The Rangers dressed as the expansion 1961 Washington Senators (the ancestral forebearers of the modern Texas Rangers).
- Rawlings made these poly knit jerseys with tackle twill lettering.
- Numbers on back are Block with Serifs.
- Original 1961 Senators uniform is shown below. Note the use of the variant version of Block (pointy tipped "1") that carried over and was used by the Rangers 1972-1979.

This page also appears in the Texas Rangers chapter and team edition.

Original 1961 Senators Uniform

* "Triumphant Glory?" I wonder who came up with that? The 1961 Senators finished the season 41 ½ games out… tied for 10th (and last) place with--- the 1961 Kansas City A's!

© GameWornGuides.com

Rangers: 2008 Turn Back the Clock to 1968 Washington Senators

1968 Original
(with 1969 patch)

The Rangers appear as the 1968 Washington Senators on May 4, 2008, vs. the 1968 Oakland A's. Majestic uniforms are a reasonably good copy, but team script is a bit thicker and more slanted than the original (left).

Red cap is nearly identical to the one adopted by the current Washington Nationals and worn by them in 2008.

This page also appears in the Texas Rangers chapter and team edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Nationals: 2010 Turn Back the Clock to 1920 Washington Senators

The Washington Nationals and Cleveland Indians wore throwback uniforms on June 12, 2010 to commemorate each city's first World Series wins in 1920 and 1924. The Nationals' uniforms were stark in their plainness. The front of the jersey is completely blank, and the only ornamentation was a navy "W" on the left sleeve. Varsity numbers used on back, which is a modern addition, as player numbers were not yet used in 1920.

This page also appears in the Washington Nationals chapter and team edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Nationals: 2010 Turn Back the Clock to 1970 Washington Senators

Bill Henderson Collection

June 26. 2010: the Baltimore Orioles celebrated the 40th Anniversary of their 1970 World Series triumph wearing replicas of those uniforms, as the Nationals donned Washington Senators uniforms from that season as well. These uniforms looked familiar to me, and I recalled that the Texas Rangers had worn the same style in 2008 in a Turn Back the Clock game of their own. A photo of the uniform from that game is below. Interestingly, the wordmark is not identical, the "S" is different and the overall script is fatter.

Texas Rangers May 4, 2008 Turn Back the Clock to 1968 - the Senators' script is not identical to the Nationals' 2010 version

This page also appears in the Washington Nationals chapter and team edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Nationals: 2011 Turn Back the Clock to 1936 Washington Senators

The Nationals visited the Padres on June 11, 2011, and both teams wore 1936-style uniforms. The Nationals wore the uniforms of the 1936 American League Washington Senators, and the Padres the 1936 Pacific Coast League Padres.

The Nationals/Senators uniforms have nothing on the front at all, featuring only a red “W” outlined with navy on the left sleeve. Back numbers are in Varsity Bold in the same color combination. Knit uniforms are made by Majestic.

This page also appears in the Washington Nationals chapter and team edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Nationals: 2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1924 Washington Senators

July 5, 2012: The San Francisco Giants visited Washington and the Nationals wore these replica ivory-colored knit 1924 throwbacks made by Majestic. A small, thin "W" adorns each sleeve, and the Red Sox-style numbers added to the back are a modern touch, as teams did not wear numbers in 1924. In the history of MLB, the team was officially known as the Senators only from 1901 to 1904. Then they officially became the "Washington Nationals" until the Senators nickname was restored in 1956. However, through their entire existence, the team continued to be mainly referred to as the Senators by fans and media.

This page also appears in the Washington Nationals chapter and team edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Prototypes and Oddballs

1972 Home Spring Training

This page also appears in the Texas Rangers chapter and team edition.

(Far Left) A surviving Senators' final-style flannel that was spared the indignity of conversion. Next to it, a converted Senators/Rangers flannel still featuring the original "1971 Set 1" shirt tail tagging of the Senators.

1971

This…

…Became that!

1972 Spring Training

Airbrushed 1971 Senators photo on 1972 card

Card shows flannel jersey from 1972 Spring Training

The first Texas Rangers team took the field for the 1972 season wearing new double knits. One could easily surmise that the Rangers, therefore, have no history in flannel. But, that is not so. When the Senators packed up and left Washington, DC to become the Rangers after the 1971 season, they brought all of their equipment with them, including all remaining 1971 uniforms. Then, unbelievably, these jerseys were converted into Rangers jerseys by painstakingly removing all of the Senators scripts from the fronts, then re-sewing Rangers lettering on. This amount of work would be unthinkable today. Today, the final set of Senators' uniforms could certainly be auctioned off as highly sought-after collectibles. But back in 1971, they were nothing more than obsolete baggage.

The new Rangers team appeared on 1972 baseball cards, with most players shown from the neck up, and wearing red caps. Clearly 1971 Senators' player photos, they were primitively airbrushed by Topps' artists to remove any trace of the Senators' logos. Note too, that the 1972 Rangers wore blue, not red hats.

The flannel jerseys might have been gone forever as soon as the season-issue double knits arrived. But frugally, the converted Senators flannels lived on in Spring Training for another year, best seen on baseball cards.

The "ghosts" of the removed Senators wordmark are still clearly visible

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 Road Spring Training

This page also appears in the Texas Rangers chapter and team edition.

I had the opportunity to examine this jersey on the light table. Tagged as a 1971 Set 2 and with Ted Williams' Senators-style #9 on the back (original) I was able to look for evidence of the Senators wordmark on front. It was faint, but it was there. The top photo shows the jersey on the light table with the clearest points of the ghosts highlighted in blue. I've then overlaid a 1970 Senators wordmark from a jersey I had in the shop and was able to confirm the points of intersection. The button spacing and placement helps with alignment. The bottom photo shows the Senators wordmark superimposed where it would have appeared on Williams' 1971 Senators jersey, converted to Rangers for 1972 Spring Training by a very, very frugal team.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 Prototypes

Frank Howard Signed 1972 Washington Senators Home Jersey

Lot Number 349

Quantity:	1	Bid Starts:	09/15/2010 12:00:00
Bid Open:	350.00	Bid Ends:	09/29/2010 23:30:00
Bid Count:	4	Overtime:	30 Minutes
Currently:	425.00	Time Left:	Ended
View Count:	14028

Description

At the forefront for the reincarnated version of the Washington Senators, former slugger Frank Howard paced the oft-woeful franchise in home runs and RBI in each of the club's last seven seasons (1965-1971) in the Nation's Capital. The offered Senators home jersey was issued to and autographed by Howard prior to the 1972 season. This white knit button-down garment features "Senators" angled across the chest in red twill, the script-style name accented by a lengthy paraph. In like fashion, "33" is sewn to the back and "HOWARD" is arched just above. On the lower portion of the first "3," Howard's black marker signature shows ("9") quality (Howard had worn "9" for his first four seasons in Washington before yielding that number to skipper Ted Williams). Within the cotton-lined collar, a "Wilson" label has a laundry marker notation of (size) "50" and an accompanying swatch tag has a stitched notation of "72." When the Senators moved to greener pastures in Texas, this jersey was likely discarded. James Spence Authentications cert/hologram #F07329 (for autograph only).

Like Be the first of your friends to like this.

1970 saw MLB's first double knit uniforms, and by 1972 nearly all teams were set to begin the season wearing them. It seems reasonable that the Senators might have asked Wilson, their sole vendor, to mock up 1972 knit uniforms for them. These examples are painfully plain, with single color red Varsity lettering and devoid of any trim. Names on back appear for the first time on a Senators uniform, and they are a variant of Varsity, unusual to be found on a MLB uniform. Perhaps not coincidentally a similar unusual font was adopted by the 1972-1978 Rangers for their home uniforms .

All of these jerseys have appeared at different times in auction catalogs of Huggins & Scott, Leland's, and Goldin Auction houses.

Richard Nixon 1972 Senators Jersey

Leland's Auctions

Historical piece that traverses multiple collecting categories: baseball, political and pure 1970s Americana. Custom made by Wilson this jersey was made to be presented to President Richard Milhouse Nixon to showcase the new KNIT uniform design. Unforgivably, the Senators instead moved to Texas in one of the great baseball tragedies up there with the defection of the Brooklyn Dodgers to Los Angeles. A true fan of the game, Richard Nixon attended many Washington Senators games, was a key figure at the 1969 Centennial of Baseball, and pursued his love of the game even after his resignation and disgrace. Classic Washington Senators sports the ultimate number "1" on the verso. "Senators" is on front, Wilson size 44 with "72" year tag, NM. Ironically, in 1972 (the year of the Watergate Break In), Nixon and the Senators began a similar fall. Eventually, both would move on, one fell from grace and the White House and the other to Arlington, Texas. Originally from Ray Kolas, long-time representative to major league baseball for Wilson Sporting Goods. According to Kolas who gave this to our consignor in 1975, it was to be rolled out at the White House in a special ceremony. They even made up an Agnew "2" (unfortunately long gone from our consignor) so the VP would not feel left out.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 Prototypes, continued

From the auction listing: "In late 1971, prior to the Senators fleeing to Texas, jersey maker Wilson was preparing to introduce the first knit uniforms to the Washington franchise, and produced only a handful in preparation for a 1972 Senators season which ultimately went south - literally. This rare jersey is one of only four known to exist, and worn in photo-ops and publicity to generate season tickets sales: one was made for then-President Richard Nixon, VP Spiro Agnew, All-Star slugger Frank Thomas, and this one... for manager Ted Williams, who served the club from 1969-1971, and then as the Rangers inaugural season manager in '72. This is undoubtedly the rarest of all Williams post-career jerseys. The beautiful Spartan white knit shell features scripted "Senators" sewn across chest in solid red single-tackle twill, with the correct "Wilson [size] 46" tag sewn in collar and white "(19)72" strip tag sewn below. Back displays arched "WILLIAMS" sewn across shoulders, again in solid red, and Williams' number "9" sewn below in same format. The Hall of Famer signed both back and front, directly below the scripted underscore on front, and again on back, below the "9". This utterly unique piece of Williams, Senators and Rangers history includes a full photo-LOA from James Spence, JSA cert number Y38142."

Letter of Authenticity

Submission Number: 109300
Date: Thursday, May 29, 2014
Subject: Ted Williams
Field: Baseball
Description: Multi Signed Knit Jersey

Manufacturer: Wilson (USA)
Type: Washington Senators

Era: 1972
Size: 46
Model: Williams

Number Of Signatures: 2
Location: Front/Back
Writing Implement: Fiber-tip Marker
Color: Blue
Uniform #: 9

Certification Number: Y38142

This document shall serve as a letter of authenticity for the aforementioned item, which James Spence Authentication, LLC has thoroughly examined.

The signature(s) is/are consistent considering a wide range of specific qualities including slant, flow, pen pressure, letter size and formation, and other characteristics typical of our extensive database of known exemplars we have examined throughout our hobby and professional careers.

It is our considered opinion that the signature item is/are genuine. Your item has been assigned a unique certification number, which is uploaded into our restricted database and can be confirmed on our website www.SpenceLOA.com at any time. This letter must appear on our proprietary water-marked paper and bear the live signatures of both James Spence and a notary public.

We appreciate your consideration of entrusting James Spence Authentication's judgment and look forward to examining additional collectibles for you in the near future.

Autographically Yours,

James J. Spence
Managing Member
James Spence Authentication, LLC

NOTARY PUBLIC OF NEW JERSEY

Sworn and subscribed to before me on May 29, 2014.

Notary Public

DONNA L. WEIGESHOFF
NOTARY PUBLIC
STATE OF NEW JERSEY
ID # 2443484
MY COMMISSION EXPIRES FEBRUARY 26, 20

JSA Y38142

New Jersey Office
2 Sylvan Way, Suite 102
Parsippany, NJ 07054
973-898-1300 • Info@SpenceLOA.com

JSA James Spence Authentication Gilder the Leader
www.SpenceLOA.com

Florida Office
3223 N.W. 10th Terrace, Suite 604
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33309
954-360-8670 • Florida@SpenceLOA.com

The auction description claims that only four of these prototype jerseys are known to exist, one each for Williams, Howard, Nixon and Agnew, however these Williams jerseys appear to be two different jerseys, if one examines the signatures.

The odd part about all of these "1972" jerseys is the Wilson tagging. The Howard jersey has 1974-1977 tagging, and the rest have the 1978-1985 version of the Wilson tag, all far later than the year tags would indicate that these were made. None of the auction listings mention this, but it makes these suspect, if still very interesting.

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 37

Detroit Tigers

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970 2025-Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Tigers Uniform History Notes

- No one would ever claim the Detroit Tigers follow the latest fashion trends. This is a team that is rivaled only by the New York Yankees in its grip on tradition. The Tigers' home jersey has not changed much in more than 60 years. The Olde English "D" dates back to 1904, and though its design changed ever so slightly over the years, and though there were some short diversions to other styles, the Tigers always quickly returned to it.
- The Tigers expressed their willingness to change with the times on their road gray jerseys only, which have displayed different (but still traditional) designs and variations of trim over the years.
- The Tigers are one of the early adopters of player names on back (1970) and one of the most consistent users of them through the decades.
- The dawning of the double knit era went largely unnoticed as regards to the home jersey. The 1972 knit is visually identical to the 1971 flannel.
- However, the road jersey for 1972 showed some flash, especially when compared to the dour road grays the Tigers had used for so many years. The new-for-1972 road jersey is a pullover knit shirt, featuring navy/white/orange sleeve-end and neck trim. "Detroit" is arched across the front in blue outlined with orange. Varsity player numbers on back are also blue outlined with orange. Player names are solid navy blue, no nameplates.
- After 13 years of use, the pullover road jersey is replaced by a button-front model of the same basic design in 1985, as baseball starts to move back from pullovers and elastic waistband pants to the more traditional look of the 1960s and before. This style is worn for eight more years, 1985-1993.
- While most teams were exiting the era of gaudy design by 1994, that is precisely when the Tigers decided to give it a try. For a single year, an uncharacteristically flashy road jersey makes its appearance. It features "Detroit" in three-color script across the front (navy/orange/white) borrowing the script design last used in 1959. But perhaps shocking for the Tigers were the addition of extra wide, five-banded "racing stripes" that started up the sides of the pants, then up both up both sides of the jersey and across the tops of the shoulders, very much like those used by the New York Mets in the 1980s, but that had been banished by them for good after 1992.
- The 1994 jersey's shoulder stripe was wide enough to swallow up the MLB 125th Anniversary patch that was sewn right in the middle of it. Recall that 1994 was a strike-shortened season, and the 1994 jerseys (with the 125th Anniversary patches removed) made a final appearance in 1995 Spring Training before being permanently retired.
- Did we mention that the home jersey still looked exactly the same in 1995 as it did in 1970?
- 1995's road jersey went to the other extreme from 1994's, perhaps. While retaining the "Detroit" three-color lettering and script, for the next three years, the gray jersey was completely devoid of any trim at all.
- 1995 also introduces an attractive Sunday alternate jersey in navy blue, featuring navy/white/orange sleeve-end trim, white/orange Varsity numbers both front and back, no player names, and on the left chest, the team's alternate logo of a tiger jumping though the Olde English "D." The team owner decided after he had seen them just once that he did not like them, partly because they lacked player names. They were banished after the 1995 season having been worn just one time. In my opinion, a shame, as these were very nice alternate jerseys.
- For 1998, the road jersey adds the same restrained navy blue knit trim as used on the home jerseys, otherwise staying the same through 2025.
- 2018 sees an update to the Olde English "D" on the home jersey, copying the cap logo, the first real change to the home jersey in decades.
- The Tigers have used an array of batting practice jerseys through the years starting in 1979, including using different designs for home and road uniforms starting in 1985. This is ironic only in that the Tigers are one of the few teams who rarely wore their batting practice jerseys in Spring Training when these are mostly often showcased, choosing instead to wear their regular season uniforms throughout the spring, a practice they continued until 2016.
- City Connect jersey's are introduced in 2024, blending Detroit's automotive legacy with modern visuals. The base is matte black, with a bold electric blue gradient running vertically down the front in a repeating tire tread pattern—symbolizing forward motion and the city's road-based heritage. The chest reads "Motor City" in industrial-style block lettering, set in bright white for maximum contrast; numbers in matching stylized font adorn the back. Wide, slanted blue racing stripes are featured on both sleeves, reinforcing the motor sports theme.
- The Tigers have maintained one of the most consistent and traditional looks in baseball, anchored by the iconic Old English "D," classic home whites, and simple road grays. While subtle tweaks occurred over the years—such as numeric font changes and alternate caps—the core aesthetic remained largely untouched.

I am always looking for new information and better photographs. If you can share new information, or offer corrections to this material, please send a note to me, at gamewornguides@gmail.com. Please tell me which page you are referencing. All contributors will be recognized by name in a future edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Year by Year Summary

1970-1971

1972-2017

1972-1984

1985-1993

Continues onward

Tigers Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1970	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Block Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	Player #- Block variant	Rawlings
1971	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Block Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	Player #- Block variant	Rawlings
1972	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1973	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1974	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1975	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1976	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	Detroit 1776-1976	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	Detroit 1776-1976	-	Wilson
1977	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1978	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson/Rawlings
1979	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1980	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1981	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1982	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1983	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1984	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1985	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1986	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1987	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1988	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1989	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1990	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1991	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1992	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Russell
1993	Home White	No	Varsity Bold 1 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 color	Extra Tall Block 1 color	No	-	-	Russell

© GameWornGuides.com

Tigers Game Jerseys

1972-2017

1994

1995 One Game Only

1995-1997

1998-2025

Tigers home jersey design remains the same, 1972-2017

* The Tigers use Block Light Condensed for names on road jerseys starting 1994, with navy as the top color. This technique allows three colors in the name without having names become too blocky. Regular names are in Block Condensed, and longer names use Extra Condensed. See the Typestyles section for more detail.

 Ernie Harwell memorial worn starting May 4.

Change to Flex Base

2018-2025

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1994	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	MLB 125th	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color *	No	-	MLB 125th	Russell
1995	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color *	No	-	-	Russell
	Alt Navy Blue	Front Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	No	-	-	Russell
1996	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color *	No	-	-	Russell
1997	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color *	No	-	Jackie Robinson	Russell
1998	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color *	No	-	-	Russell
1999	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	Tiger Stadium mem	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color *	No	-	-	Russell
2000	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	Tigers 2000 (new ballpark)	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color *	No	Tigers 2000 (new ballpark)	-	Russell
2001	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	Detroit 300	AL 100th Anniv	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	Detroit 300	AL 100th Anniv	Russell
2002	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Russell
2003	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Russell
2004	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Russell
2005	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	All Star Game	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	All Star Game	-	Majestic
2006	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2007	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2008	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2009	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2010	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	"EH" Ernie Harwell mem	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	"EH" Ernie Harwell mem	Majestic
2011	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No		Sparky Anderson mem	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No		Sparky Anderson mem	Majestic
2012	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2013	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No			Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No			Majestic
2014	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	-		Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	-		Majestic
2015	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No			Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No			Majestic
2016	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No			Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No			Majestic
2017	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No		"Mr. I" white border	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No		"Mr. I" orange border	Majestic
2018	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No			Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No			Majestic
2019	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No		MLB150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No		MLB150th Anniversary	Majestic
2020	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No		Kaline mem. (white border)	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No		Kaline mem (orange border)	Nike

© GameWornGuides.com

These two styles continue from previous years

Switch to Vapor Premiere Elite

Tigers Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2021	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No			Nike
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No			Nike
2022	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No		Kimera Bartee memorial (white border)	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No		Kimera Bartee memorial (orange border)	Nike
2023	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡*		Nike
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡*		Nike
2024	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color (no perf)	Nike Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color (no perf)	Varsity 3 color (no perf)	Nike Block 3 color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	Alt Blue Home	No	Varsity 1 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	Alt Blue Road	No	Varsity 1 color (perf(	Nike Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	City Connect	No	Custom 1 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡	313 patch‡	Nike
2025	Home White	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	Road Gray	Front Varsity 3 color	Varsity 3 color	Block Cond 3 color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	Alt Blue Home	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	Alt Blue Road	No	Varsity 1 color	Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡		Nike
	City Connect	No	Custom 1 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 Color	No	Meijer Ad patch‡	313 patch‡	Nike

‡ patch sleeve varies based on handedness of player

* Starting May 25, 2023

 The Tigers added their Spring Training/BP jerseys as official alternates in the MLB Style Guide for the 2024 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1970-1971 Home

1970

While the jersey is flannel, the lettering is navy cotton twill, sewn with a zig-zag stitch. The number font is Wilson Varsity; player names are in a tall, narrow and lightweight black font.

1970 or 1971

1971

1970

The Detroit Tigers' "Olde English D" first appeared on the left chest of the team's home jersey in 1905. Between then and 1933, it was usually present, though there were a couple of years when the jersey was without it . But by 1934, it was here to stay,. The home jersey was basically unchanged for the next 83 years, until a minor "freshening" in 2018 altered its shape a bit, changing it to match the logo on the team cap. Simple Navy knit trim rings the placket; Varsity style numbers on back. Player names on back appear for the first time in 1970 on both home and road jerseys. 1970-1971 are the final two years of flannel jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

1970-1971 Road

The Tigers' road uniform for 1970-1971 is the model of understatement. It says "we are the visiting team and we know it." Plain gray flannel fabric, Block "Detroit" arched on the front, Block Bold numbers on back and on the right sleeve (sure, Varsity was used on the home jersey… but those are made by Wilson. Rawlings uses a different font. Who's going to notice anyway?)

In these examples, notice all the variations in the number fonts. Some may have been re-lettered, but looking carefully at period photos, players on the field at the same time are seen wearing jerseys with different number fonts, some even with a different font on the back than their sleeve! This was a relic of the time.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-2017 Home

Wilson 1972-1991

1972

1974

1975, re-used in 1976 with 1976 patch on sleeve

1972 signals the switch to double knits. Their uniform is exactly as it had been the prior year, only the type of cloth is different. Player names remain on back through entire double knit era.

One thing I have learned through the years is that very few Tigers' uniforms pre-1990s survived in their original configuration. It does not matter who the player was - star or not - jerseys were unceremoniously stripped of player names at end of each season, and sometimes of numbers too, and the uniforms were sent to be used in either spring training or at one of the club's minor league franchises. Finding an original, unrestored jersey through the late 1980s at least, is a rarity. Many that have been restored have been done so incorrectly.

Player number and name fonts varied: until the age of computer graphics it seems there was no firm standard for numbers and names; several variants were used and it seems most lettering was hand-cut.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-2017 Home, continued: Wilson 1972-1991

1979

1981

1982

1983

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-2017 Home, continued: Wilson 1972-1991

1983

1984

1985

1986

1987

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-2017 Home, continued: Wilson 1972-1991

Numbers on back grow from 7 ½" between 1972-1993 to 8" in 1994. NOB 3 ½" tall starting in 1992 (had previously been an extra tall 4", sometimes even 4 ½").

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-2017 Home, continued: Russell 1992-2004/Majestic 2005-2017

1994

1995

Numbers on back grow from 7 ½" between 1972-1993 to 8" in 1994. NOB 3 ½" tall starting in 1992 (had previously been an extra tall 4", sometimes even 4 ½").

1999

2003

2005

2010

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-2017 Home, continued: Majestic 2005-2017

2012 World Series

2013

2016

2017

© GameWornGuides.com

Tigers Home Tagging Examples

Left: I like this photo because it shows us that on that day Mark Fidrych was wearing his 1977 set 2 jersey. We can see the tag.

If you collect Tigers game jerseys you may have noticed these letters scrawled on the locker tag of many jerseys in the hobby. These are the initials of Jim Schmakel, the Tigers equipment manager since 1978. The "G" indicates that he knows that the item was game used. One other odd thing about Tigers tagging is the presence of a seemingly random number at the end of the tag string, something that seems to have started on Russell jerseys around 1992. This appears to be an inventory number of some kind used by the team to account for the number of jerseys made in a year.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1984 Road

Oops: "8" is sewn on upside down. A common authentic mistake.

1972

1973: Willie Horton's road V-neck with his characteristically ripped open neck seam. He altered his jerseys this way throughout his career.

1973

As the double-knit era begins, the Tigers adopt a somewhat "mod" pullover road jersey with wide elastic knit sleeve trim and knit collar trim.

Two-color navy/orange 7 ½" Varsity numbers on back

One-color navy names, in Block font, an extra tall 4" sometimes even 4 ½".

1973

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1984 Road, continued

1974

1976

1978 Wilson

1978 Rawlings

The Tigers used road jerseys made by both Wilson and Rawlings in 1978; some of the variations between the manufacturers are visible in the examples above. As was so typical of Tigers jerseys of this era, the Corcoran jersey (above right) has had its name on back stripped and replaced, and clearly has endured a number change as well, as visible in the restored "2". The "55" on the small tag is most likely a Tigers inventory number.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1984 Road, continued

1983

1983

You're not seeing double - these are two 1983 Lance Parrish road jerseys, with the subtle difference in tagging showing the top jersey as set 1 and the bottom as set 2. In this era, teams typically issued two of each uniform to players to help balance out wear and tear. I have been fortunate to authenticate both of these jerseys, and thought it would be fun to reunite them here, as they once likely hung together in Parrish's locker in clubhouses across Major League Baseball some four decades ago.

Parrish and Kirk Gibson in action, September 5, 1983. Almost certainly Parrish is wearing one of these two jerseys in the photo.

© GameWornGuides.com

Road Jersey Lettering Variations

Three photos of the same player, Mark Fidrych who had a remarkable but injury-shortened five season career, 1976-1980. He is pictured here wearing road uniforms with three different variants of the front DETROIT lettering. Look mostly at the orange outline, and the negative space around the top of the “T” and the spacing, or lack thereof, between the letters. This sort of inconsistency was fairly typical in the days before computer graphics. Often, the outline color was hand-cut with a pair of scissors after the top layer had been pressed on. It all depended on who was doing the cutting, layout and sewing how the uniforms looked in the end.

© GameWornGuides.com

1985-1993 Road

Wilson 1985-1986

1985

Jordan Simmermaker collection

1986

Identical to 1972-1984 style, but changes to a button-front design, 1985-1993. Wide orange/white/navy knit sleeve end trim, with narrower trim in the same colors encircling the neck.

Wilson is manufacturer in 1985-1986, Rawlings takes over 1987-1991, then Russell for 1992-1993. 1987 is the first year with the Rawlings script embroidered on the right sleeve end trim.

Two-color varsity numbers on back only, navy/orange, still slightly smaller than most other teams use, at 7 ½".

One-color navy names, in block font, extra tall at 4".

© GameWornGuides.com

1985-1993 Road, continued: Rawlings 1987-1991

1987

1990

Bill Henderson Collection

1990

© GameWornGuides.com

1985-1993 Road, continued: Russell 1992-1993

1992

1993

1993

© GameWornGuides.com

1994 Road

Bill Henderson Collection

Left: Period photo shows the Tigers wearing these 1994 one-year style jerseys in Spring Training 1995, they removed the MLB 125th Anniversary patch worn during 1994 from their sleeves. This explains why one seldom comes across a 1994 jersey with the patch still affixed!

New Detroit script closely resembles the wordmark first used on 1930 road uniforms. Now with wide, knit racing stripes on shoulders and down sleeves, sewn on top of knit fabric. Three-color front and back Varsity numbers, navy/orange/white.

Name on back is also three-color navy/orange/white, usually in Block Light Condensed.

The Tigers are late to join the “wild trim” party, and this design lasts only one year. These are the last MLB jerseys to feature racing stripe trim.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995 Alternate

Bill Henderson Collection

These jerseys were intended to be worn during Sunday home games. Team ownership did not like the idea of jerseys without player names on back, and so these nice-looking jerseys were eliminated after only a single game, Sunday, May 7, 1995. Initially intended to be paired with pinstriped pants (see photo at right), according to an inside source, immediately before game time the team was ordered by team president John McHale to "take off those clown pants" and wear their regular white pants instead. Lettering is Varsity two-color numbers, white/orange. Note proper placement of front numbers. No names on the back. This article by Jason Beck of MLB.com offers more detail.

Hard to see, but MLB's 1995 internal style guide shows this jersey with its pinstriped pants. Note the narrow orange and white outlines around the logo, and the sleeve numbers that did not make the cut, though I doubt the jersey was intended to have three sets of numbers on it.

© GameWornGuides.com

Solved! The Mysterious Disappearance of the Tigers 1995 Alternate Blue Jerseys....

Top Left: The jersey as purchased by a collector, presented (accurately) as a Lakeland Tigers minor league jersey...but there's much more to the story!

Above: The faded printing reading "95-3-42" on the front tag, identifying this as an original Detroit Tigers 1995 alternate issued to Alan Trammell.

Collector Stephen K. was perusing jerseys for sale online when he stumbled on this Lakeland Tigers late 1990s jersey. It was generally the same style as the Tigers' one-game 1995 alternate, except it had the Lakeland Tigers' logo on the chest and smaller numbers on the back, along with a minor league baseball anniversary patch on the sleeve. But a faded tag, barely legible, was on the front below the Russell tag— which said it was a "Diamond Collection" jersey… Russell's branding for authentic on-field MLB wear in the mid to late 90s. And while it's true that a few minor league clubs wore jerseys with Diamond Collection tagging, most of these were re-purposed MLB jerseys. He decided to take a gamble and bought it without asking too many questions. He figured that if it turned out to be a "nothing", he could easily resell it the same way as he had purchased it. He wondered— could it be??

The Tigers were a team that wasted nothing, and at the start of 1990s they were still sending their used jerseys and pants to the minors to be used and used until they were worn out and discarded.

Besides being the Spring Training home of the MLB club, Lakeland Florida is home to the Class A Lakeland Tigers (since 2007 known as the Flying Tigers). The Lakeland Tigers wore uniforms in the 1990s that had a stylized variant of the big club's Gothic logo, except theirs was a Gothic "L" instead of the Detroit D. Tigers' home jerseys were often re-purposed in this way for them to use.

When Stephen got the jersey, he could see that the well-worn MLB tag had some printing on it, but it was so faded it was nearly impossible to make out. He sent it to me and asked me to take a look at it. The first thing I did was to take a high resolution scan of the tagging and apply my Photoshop filters to it… and when I did, the writing popped right out. 95-3-42. That's 1995, #3, size 42. As in #3 Alan Trammell… 20 years with the Tigers, 2017 Hall of Fame-Inductee Alan Trammell… are you kidding me?

The next step was to look for evidence that this had indeed been a 1995 Tigers jersey that had been converted to minor league use. I put it on the light table and I could see a few marks where the front crest had been sewn, but I could not see any evidence of old numbers being there. And, that didn't really surprise me. Fabric ghosts and shadows come to exist mostly from repeated washings and uniform wear in the sun, left behind adhesive, plus the addition of years of time. In this case, we knew that if this had indeed been a Tigers jersey it was only ever worn and washed once in its original configuration. And things sewn on then nearly immediately removed 25 years ago were not bound to have left a lot of marks. The current logo and numbers had been on there for a quarter century and the jerseys showed evidence of being worn and washed perhaps hundreds of times. This was going to take some sleuthing.

© GameWornGuides.com

The Mysterious Disappearance of 1995 Alternate Blue Jerseys, continued

The first thing we needed to do after taking exacting photos of the jersey in its minor league configuration was to strip it completely, then photograph it again on the light table, superimposing images of the proposed original numbers and team crest onto it, and see if we could find any points of intersection: holes, pulls and fading that matched what once may have been there a quarter century ago.

I carefully removed the numbers, the crest, and the sleeve patch and went back to the light table. Taking a series of photographs with different exposures and applying my Photoshop filters I was indeed able to clearly see edges of where the original (smaller) Tigers crest had been sewn on the left front. I've highlighted the two outlines here in pink and blue. Stephen found a retail version of this jersey and sacrificed it for the restoration. I carefully removed the front "D" from the donor noting how tightly was stitched in place, the edge bound with a satin embroidery stitch. This method of attachment left ample pinholes to show where it came off. It neatly covered the original outline on the Lakeland jersey like the missing piece of a jigsaw puzzle.

The numbers were much more difficult to see, looking straight on I could see nothing clearly, but I found if I tipped the light table at a very sharp angle, I could see faint lines of where fabric threads had been compressed closer together with sewing machine stitching. I used a black-light pen to lightly mark those lines in the spots where I saw them, and behold— a pattern began to emerge. The number 3, centered on the jersey back, and in the proper size to match the team template! I did the same on the front, and there had been a 3 there as well, too. We had a positive match!

© GameWornGuides.com

The Mysterious Disappearance of 1995 Alternate Blue Jerseys, continued

Using my own game-worn jersey from this game as a positive match for the sizes of the numbers back and front, I cut new ones. I stitched everything onto the historic jersey using the light table for precise placement.

I fully documented the restoration and wrote up the authentication so that they next person looking at this on a light table would understand why there were ghosts of a 47 and a different team crest on the front. Without this step, the value of this historic jersey would possibly be lost. After all, who would believe that this wasn't simply a Lakeland Tigers jersey converted to look like one belonging to a Hall of Fame player?

Here it is completed- restored back to original. Stephen is justifiably pleased with his barn-find prize. And I am satisfied to have been able to help answer a question about "what happened to these Tigers jerseys after all?" So, keep your eyes open for diamonds in the rough like this one. Many minor league jerseys from the 1990s and before started life as MLB jerseys.

Follow this link to see the post on my Facebook blog.

Letter of Professional Opinion and Document of Restoration

Alan Trammell Detroit Tigers Game Worn 1995 Blue Alternate Jersey

Examination Date: December 4 2020 Certification Number: 20-120001

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Navy blue no-button Russell jersey issued to #3 Alan Trammell. Size 42, with Tigers alternate crest on the left chest, a large embroidered applique patch showing a growling tiger in orange and black, climbing through a white Gothic D. Navy/white/orange sewn-on first term rings each sleeve end. Player number "3" on the right chest and centered on the back in the proper size and font for the 1995 Tigers, in white, outlined with orange. There is no player name on back.

This is one of the most notorious (if all MLB) jerseys. They were intended to be worn (at) season for Sunday home games. But ownership, unaccustomed seeing them not prior to them being used on the field for the first time, disapproved of the look, and did they like the idea of jerseys without player names on back. As a result, these jerseys were eliminated after only a single game's use, on Sunday, May 7, 1995. Initially intended to be paired with pinstriped pants (according to an inside source) immediately before game time the team was reportedly ordered by team president John McHale to, "take off those pinstripe pants" and then their regular white pants matched. Under normal circumstances, before Tigers' game jerseys leave the premises for the Sand Lot, each is hand initialed on the front tag by long-time equipment manager Jim Schmakel, a signal that they have been game used. Not so with this set. They disappeared from Tiger Stadium with no record. Over the years, a very few original examples have turned up at auction, while others were sent to Lakeland to be used by a Minor League squad. This jersey was in that last group.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell locker tag sewn to the outside right tail, at the certain quality semi-used not later than 1994. No-name tag and small fabric 100% polyester flag tag under the Russell tag both proper with Russell team issued jerseys. An extremely well-defined rectangular in the fabric tag is outlined beneath the tail locker tag, on it is the standard size matrix printed code 95-1-42-1995, player number 3, size 42. Someone has written "95" in black marker on that tag, probably with some relation to its minor league service.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authenticator / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
MilesTheDream.Shop

Allowed as natural prior to restoration. Blue highlighted photos on the page show the light table enhancements of the original front crest and the back number.

Wear & Repairs, Documentation of Professional Restoration: As received for review, this jersey was in its second life, labeled for the Lakeland Tigers and had number 47 stitched to the front and back. It shows signs of moderately heavy wear, with pockmarking of all elements and graying, fraying and pockmarking of white tagging. The numbers and front crest were sloppily stitched in place, typical of Minor League form.

A light table examination revealed that the Tigers crest had once been on the left chest, and had been removed and replaced by the Lakeland crest. Noting the base tagging tabs on that this jersey had been originally issued as "95", and we were able to see faint evidence that the numeral 3 had indeed been on the back, centered beneath the two replacement numbers, as well as on the right front. A red, white and blue Minor League Baseball commemorative patch was stitched to the left sleeve.

Satisfied that this had indeed been a MLB Tigers jersey repurposed to the Minor Leagues, I stripped all the MLB elements from the jersey and again examined it on the light table. The former smaller MLB Tigers crest outline was clearly evident, as if had been stitched on with a light embroidery stitch having close tools. The numbers "95" on front and back were very faint, so would be expected because they probably were on this shirt very briefly some 25 years ago, and likely only washed once with them in place. The evidence of the old numbers was evident mostly as the edges from stitching fabric compression, and under ultraviolet light where slight discoloring of the areas that they occupied from the adhesive with which they had been tacked in place.

Replacement numbers in the team font were made in Tigers orange and white, and they perfectly covered the old ghosts. A crest was harvested from a dense jersey and sewn over the original marks. The Minor League Baseball patch was removed from the left sleeve. It left behind faced on hot-melt glue that was mostly removed with solvent.

Conclusion: The jersey in review shows wear that mostly occurred in its second life in the Minor leagues. It has been restored to original specifications, and is again properly labeled, and numbered. It has original authentic team issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made for and worn by Alan Trammell of the 1995 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

1994-Specific Road Script

Compared below side by side, 1994 at left, and 1997. The team road script was unique in 1994, and was tweaked slightly for 1995 and after. It is more italic in 1994, leaning forward more than in subsequent years. I have highlighted some of the most notable points of difference, mostly seen in the shapes of the insides of letters and the change in “white space” between the two versions. The easiest place to see it is in the cut-out centers of the loops in the “D” and the “E” that disappear in 1995, as well as the white space between the “R” and the “O” that is opened for 1995. On the earlier design, the dot over the I is separate, but on the later variant the white layer is connected. Notably these sorts of changes often happen when manufacturer switches from one company to another, but in this case, both are Russell jerseys.

Ron Sodano Photo

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-1997 Road

The wide racing stripes of 1994 were removed to leave an ultra-plain gray jersey. The “Detroit” script was also slightly tweaked to appear less slanted and more upright.

Numbers on front and back are Varsity, three-color, navy/orange/white. Names on back are 3” three-color Block Condensed, just like those in 1994.

(Inset left) Note the switch to Block Extra Condensed for the name font for the 8-letter name.

© GameWornGuides.com

1998-2023 Road

Russell 1998-2004

2000

2002

2001

Navy blue knit trim is added to the front and collar to dress up the plain, earlier design. Everything else remains the same as before. This style is made by Russell from 1998-2004, Majestic from 2005-2019, and Nike from 2020-2023. Varsity style, three-color names and numbers in navy/orange/white.

Left: Original 1954 road uniform, clearly the inspiration for the 1998 redesign.

© GameWornGuides.com

1998-2023 Road, continued: Majestic 2005-2019

2006

2007

2009

2010

© GameWornGuides.com

1998-2023 Road, continued: Majestic 2005-2019

2012

2014

Above: Pitcher Al Alburquerque's jersey was a challenge for the stitcher, for sure.

2013

Left: As worn in the 2013 All-Star Game, with All-Star sleeve patch and collar-back stars.

© GameWornGuides.com

1998-2023 Road, continued: Majestic 2005-2019/Nike 2020-2023

Top left: 2016 brings the change to Majestic Flex Base template

Bottom left: Nike takes over manufacturing, carrying over Majestic's Flex Base template 2020-2023. Tag code changes from DGRR to DG2R. Ad patch begins 2023.

© GameWornGuides.com

Tigers Road Tagging Examples

Tigers' tagging varies by year and by jersey manufacturer. 1995-1999 jerseys seem not to have any year or set tagging as the 1995 example shows.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." Multi-color lettered jerseys also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of previous years.

Left: Jackie Robinson Day jersey intentionally omits player names.

With the switch, the Tigers home jersey returns to equally-spaced buttons on front rather than matching the uneven spacing of the road jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018: Update to Olde English "D" Logo

The Tigers adopted the Olde English "D" as a logo way back in 1904. Though it has changed at times, the style of the "D" on Tigers' jerseys had been steadfast since 1934. Until 2018, when the team updated the jersey logo to match the one on the cap. (It had already been changed on BP and Spring Training jerseys in 2017.) With it, Majestic's style code for the jersey updated from DGHH to DGH1, as seen on the tags below.

Yes, the two logos had been mismatched for years, a leftover from evolutions in manufacturing and design. The new "D" from the cap is somewhat simpler, which works better in a modern context of logos being reproduced in smaller applications on phone screens and online. Many other teams have gone through similar primary logo changes in recent years for the same reason. And though this change made the Tigers home uniform more "uniform," many traditionalists mourned the lost charm of the mismatch, a product of a simpler time less concerned with mass merchandising and marketing.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018-2023 Home

The updated “D” logo on the front of the Tigers jersey continues through Majestic’s last year of manufacture in 2019, and over to the new Nike version of the Flex Base template starting in 2020. With the change to Nike, its logo appears on the front right chest starting in 2020 as well. Otherwise, the jersey remains the same, though the code on the laundry tag updates again, this time from DGH1 with Majestic to DG11 with Nike.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020-2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly - a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Tigers classic home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the knit trim around the neck and down the placket appears closer together than it once had. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Road

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Tigers classic home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the knit trim around the neck and down the placket appears closer together than it once had, and the "Detroit" script now breaks across the "T" instead of between the "E" and "T" as before. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Home/Spring Training Home

For 2024, the Tigers include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or batting practice, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2024.

That said, the switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in almost no visible changes to this style. The most prominent change for most teams is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. Perhaps because these are used in Spring Training only, the team was permitted to keep their 2023-size player names on these jerseys. They opt for perforated numbers, which don't appear on their regular home and road jerseys, perhaps as an antidote to the Florida heat.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Road/Spring Training Road

For 2024, the Tigers include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or BP, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2024.

That said, the switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in almost no visible changes to this style. The most prominent change for most teams is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. Perhaps because these are used in Spring Training only, the team was permitted to keep their 2023-size player names on these jerseys. They opt for perforated numbers, which don't appear on their regular home and road jerseys, perhaps as an antidote to the Florida heat.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024-2025 City Connect

Corey Magee Collection

Detroit is the Motor City, so it makes sense for the Tigers' City Connect to pay homage to that legacy. According to the MLB press release, several elements of the city's motor history are embedded in the design.

- TIRE TREADS: Down the middle of the jersey is shaded in electric blue, tire treads represent the wheels keeping the Motor City and the Tigers accelerating toward the future.
- M-1 – 313 PATCH: The 313 patch stitched on the left sleeve of the jersey takes you on a ride to M-1 – known to Detroiters as Woodward Avenue, America's first paved road in 1909. The baseball diamond-shaped patch features Detroit's "313" area code, with the number 1 bolded and emphasized to emulate the classic M-1 road signs.
- SLEEVE TAPE: The addition of racing stripes at the bottom of each sleeve of the jersey is nod to Detroit's central role in the racing industry.
- VIN TAG: Much like every vehicle has its own unique VIN (Vehicle Identification Number), Detroit's City Connect uniforms feature a VIN tag heat pressed in the collar with 190135456884, which represent the first year of the club's charter membership in the American League (1901), alongside 35, 45, 68, and 84, which celebrate Detroit's four World Series Championships.
- TIGER EYES: "Tiger Eyes" above the jock tag symbolize the passion, energy, and tenacity of Detroiters and its baseball team.

This style premiered in 2024, so it originated on Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template. Sleeve trim is sewn on, however, given its width. Back numbers are perforated. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite the updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. Note the jersey now has the new-for-2025 white Nike jock tag, which has been used on a handful of jerseys around the league.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of time (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. Like other 2025 jerseys, gray jerseys also have back name and numbers enlarged, in most cases back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Home/Spring Training Home

Once again in 2025, the Tigers include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or BP, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2025. The changes from the 2024 version are few. The jersey itself appears the same, though with the official return to pre-2024 lettering, the arc of the player names on back is less steep, which appears to allow for even bigger NOB letters than in 2024. As noted in a previous page, the team did not use the tiny 2" letters on the 2024 version of this jersey, so the change is less apparent as it would be for other teams. Back numbers are no longer perforated for 2025.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Road/Spring Training Road

Once again in 2025, the Tigers include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or BP, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2025. The changes from the 2024 version are few. The jersey itself appears the same, though with the official return to pre-2024 lettering, the arc of the player names on back is less steep, which appears to allow for even bigger NOB letters than in 2024. As noted in a previous page, the team did not use the tiny 2" letters on the 2024 version of this jersey, so the change is less apparent as it would be for other teams. Back numbers are no longer perforated for 2025.

© GameWornGuides.com

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1979-1985 Batting Practice

Above: Wilson year tagged 1983

Top Right: Majestic jersey not year tagged.

Navy blue mesh pullover, orange/white/navy trim on sleeve ends and V-neck collar. It is tough to pin a specific period of use on Tigers' BP jerseys as the team rarely is photographed in anything other than white or gray game uniforms.

Two-color, 9" Bold Varsity numbers on back. No names on back used.

© GameWornGuides.com

1985-1991 Road Batting Practice

1987

1985

1990

Gray mesh fabric, modeled to look like the button-front Tiger road jerseys of the era, worn 1985-1991.

Two-color navy/ orange, 9” Varsity numbers on the back, no names.

© GameWornGuides.com

1986-1993 Home Batting Practice

This batting practice jersey style was used at home from the mid to late 1980s through around 1992 or 1993. Notice two collar trim variants are shown here. Exact years of use are not yet confirmed.

Top left: This jersey is made by Majestic, and the large-hole mesh fabric identifies it as an early issue, perhaps even 1985. It has white/blue/white trim at the collar and on the sleeve ends.

Bottom left: This jersey is made by Russell but appears to be the same as the Majestic jersey at top left. Its tagging dates it from 1992 or 1993.

Bottom center: Majestic jersey has a button front and white/blue/white trim at the collar. Its manufacturer label in the tail identifies it as being from around 1986 to 1992.

Bottom right: Russell jersey is also from 1992 or 1993, identified by its manufacturer tag on the tail. Notice that this variation has a plain collar without the striped white trim.

I have been unable to locate photos of Tigers players wearing this style jersey. Of all MLB teams, the Tigers seem to wear their BP jerseys the least. They play most Spring Training games in regular season uniforms.

© GameWornGuides.com

1989-1991 Home Batting Practice

These are the home batting practice jerseys that were worn during most of the same years that the Tigers wore the gray “Detroit” batting practice jersey on the road, the one seen a couple of pages prior.

In earlier editions, we opined that these were worn in Spring Training only, but readers have written to advise that this is not so.

© GameWornGuides.com

Late 1980s-Early 1990s Alternate Zip-Neck Batting Practice

These zip-neck mesh jersey variations are made by Majestic. All feature elastic waistbands though the earlier version's trim is more ornate. Most likely, in use, these all had Wilson Varsity numbers on back in the same colors as the "D" on the front, as seen in a few of these examples.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993 Road Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

Due to their unpopularity with players and management, these bright jerseys last only one season. All team-issued ones are tagged with orange Plastisol ink on a white tag, with year, player number, and a Tigers' sequence code that remains a mystery to outsiders. To date I have never come across one made for retail sale. These are extremely rare.

A little too flashy perhaps for the conservative Tigers, this bright button-front style didn't last long before orange returned to its role as a trim color alone. All lettering is blue outlined with white.

© GameWornGuides.com

1994 Batting Practice/ 1995 Spring Training (replacement players)

1994 with year tagging

After use in 1994, these BPs were reused for the strike replacement players in 1995 spring training. When the regular season began a new set was issued, as seen on the next page, with different color front logo and no sleeve numbers.

Navy blue mesh fabric with the new-for-1994 logo on the chest, wide racing stripes on the sleeve tops. Identify by the navy blue “D” on the front. Three-color, (white/ navy/orange) numbers on right sleeve and back. No NOB.

1995 Spring Training used

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-1997 Batting Practice

Subtle changes made for 1995. The large jumping tiger “D” on the front is changed to white and logo’s white background/outline becomes navy. Numbers on the sleeves disappear. These warmups are supplied by both Russell and Majestic. Russell jerseys are tagged with year/player number, Majestic ones appear untagged.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-1998 Alternate Zip-Neck Batting Practice (style #1)

This Majestic “Gamewarmer” alternate style is from photographs dated 1998. It is a navy zipper-neck with thin orange and navy blue knit trim bands on sleeve ends and collar. Numbers are one-color white Varsity on back only.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-2000 Alternate Zip-Neck Batting Practice (style #2)

This Majestic Game-warmer alternate batting practice jersey features the same front logo as appears on the short-lived 1995 alternate home jersey and on the 1995-1997 regular batting practice jersey. Slash pockets, fancy multi-striped trim at collar and sleeve ends, elastic at waist.

On these, there is no team tagging apparent.

© GameWornGuides.com

1998-1999 Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

This button-front batting practice jersey is plain, solid navy blue mesh style and is devoid of trim. It is numbered with one-color white Varsity numbers on back only.

During the regular season, the Tigers usually wear their team's commemorative patches on their batting practice jerseys as well.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2002 Home Batting Practice

Steve Kraljic Collection

Navy blue mesh fabric with white knit trim on jersey front and collar. No names on the back. One-color white Varsity numbers.

Right: Jerseys made for team use have an embroidered Majestic logo on the sleeve. Retail versions use a heat-transferred Majestic logo.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2002 Road Batting Practice

The 2000 version of the Tigers' road BP jersey is heavy navy blue mesh, and features orange knit trim on the placket, and one-color orange varsity numbers on back. The "Detroit" script on front is actually two-color, orange outlined with navy blue. The player numbers are solid orange, no outline.

The Tigers seldom wear this jersey during Spring Training, and therefore finding photos of players with them on is always a challenge.

Above: Team-issued jerseys have an embroidered Majestic logo on the sleeve like this one. Retail versions for sale have a heat-transfer decal.

Right: The example shown here in close-up is a store bought, not a team issued jersey. The two-hole buttons give it away! Team spec jerseys have buttons with four holes.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2006 Home Batting Practice

Made of softer, non-mesh tech fabric. Notice the underarm bands of different fabric where the sleeves meet the jersey body.

Identify by the thin white piping sewn into the seams on the tops of the sleeves.

Varsity one-color white numbers on back. No player names used. Finding action shots of the Tigers wearing these jerseys is difficult, as the team typically wears its regular home or road jerseys during Spring Training where most press photos originate.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2006 Road Batting Practice

Made of soft, non-mesh moisture-wicking fabric. Identify by the orange piping on the tops of the sleeves. This fabric was highly prone to snags and fading. Player-used ones often look very ratty. Single-color orange Varsity number on back. No player names are used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 Home Batting Practice

The Tigers have consistently worn home and road styles of batting practice jerseys since the mid 1980s. They continue this trend with the all-MLB redesign of batting practice jerseys in 2007.

Home jersey is navy blue with the Olde English "D" on the left chest. The side has a white and navy-blue panel insert.

No names are used on back, single-color numbers only, in white. All numbers and front design are heat-applied appliqués for jerseys in this style.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 Road Batting Practice

With the switch to pullover Cool Base batting practice jerseys for 2007, the Detroit Tigers continue their custom of having different jerseys for use at home and on the road.

The road model features the Olde English “D” in orange outlined with white on the left chest. Spandex mesh side panels are orange at the bottom and white under the arms. All numbers and front design are heat-applied appliqués for jerseys in this style.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Home Batting Practice

For 2011, all of Major League Baseball changes to button-front Cool Base batting practice jerseys.

The Tigers continue their practice of having separate home and road batting practice jerseys.

The home model is navy with plain white side panels and has a white panel above the back numbers. Numbers on back are white Varsity. No names on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Road Batting Practice

The road version of the batting practice jersey for 2011 is a button-front design, orange Varsity numbers on back.

Navy jersey body, with orange mesh side panels and above the numbers on the back. Numbers on back are twill.

Olde English "D" on front is orange outlined with white.

Finding photos in the press of the Tigers wearing their batting practice jerseys is difficult. They do not wear them in the spring for games like most teams do, choosing to wear their regular season uniforms instead.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Home Batting Practice

MLB and Majestic redesigned all teams' batting practice jerseys for 2014. For the Tigers' home BP, knit navy and white trim is added to neck and sleeve openings. White side panels are shorter than on the 2013 version, now stopping before the garment's tail. The white shoulder-top yoke of the previous version is removed, and that panel is now solid blue. Player names in white Block Condensed, player numbers in white single-color Varsity.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Road Batting Practice

The road BP for 2014 mimics the new 2014 home jersey, replacing all white elements with orange. Sleeve end and neck trim is navy and orange, all adornment is orange twill; side panels are orange mesh.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Spring Training Home

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Tigers use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season BP jerseys as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are also white patterned twill. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "FL" representing where the Tigers spend Spring Training. In keeping with their tradition, the Tigers also continue to wear their home uniforms throughout Spring Training home games as well.

Notice the subtle difference between the 2016 and 2017 versions of the Tigers' Spring Training jerseys. The 2016 uses the "flat" game jersey wordmark. The 2017 versions a few pages ahead use the curvy "cap logo" Olde English "D."

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Spring Training Road

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with “2016” and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Tigers use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season BP jerseys as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are orange patterned twill. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2016” and “FL” representing where the Tigers spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training Home

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before. The Tigers only use one-color white twill for their jersey, so this change is moot in 2017.

The Tigers again use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season BP jerseys as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. But, for the first time in 2017, the curvy “cap version” of the Tigers‘ Olde English "D" appears on the front left chest in white, rather than the version that typically appears on the home uniform. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “FL” representing where the Tigers spend Spring Training.

All jerseys have a blue-bordered “Mr. I” patch on the left sleeve, a memorial to owner Mike Ilitch who died in February.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training Road

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same patterned twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The Tigers again use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season BP jerseys as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. But, for the first time in 2017, the curvy “cap version” of the Tigers' Olde English "D" appears on the front left chest in white, rather than the version that typically appears on the home uniform. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “FL” representing where the Tigers spend Spring Training. All jerseys have an orange-bordered “Mr. I” patch on the left sleeve, a memorial to owner Mike Ilitch who died in February. This patch is different from the home version which has a blue border.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Home Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Tigers jersey is blue with gray back and underarm gussets. The curvy “cap version” of the Tigers' old English "D" appears on the front left chest in white. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in white Varsity on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice Jersey, Road

As is their frequent custom dating back to the mid 1980s, the Tigers have a separate set of home and road batting practice jerseys that they issue to players. The road version of the new-for-2017 3/4-sleeve BP jersey has an orange front with sewn navy "Detroit" script. The back of the jersey is navy blue. Player numbers are sewn at the mid-point of the left sleeve, and backs are blank.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training Home

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Tigers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, reminiscent of their regular-season BP jerseys, as their basis. The front logo is white on the home version, while name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training Road

The Tigers are one of a handful of teams that use different spring jerseys for home and road games. Their road jersey substitutes an orange team crest on the front but is otherwise identical to the home one. The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Tigers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, reminiscent of their regular-season BP jerseys as their base. The front logo is orange on the road version, while name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training Home

The 2019 Spring Training jersey template evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The Tigers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, reminiscent of their regular-season BP jerseys, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "FLA," referencing their Spring Training home. On the home version, the front logo, name, and back numbers are white twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training Road

The Tigers continue their practice of using different spring jerseys for home and road games. For 2019, their road jersey substitutes orange lettering front and back but is otherwise identical to the home one. 2019's jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The Tigers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, reminiscent of their regular-season BP jerseys, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "FLA," referencing their Spring Training home. On the road version, the front logo, name, and back numbers are orange twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training Home

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020, the Tigers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, a blue jersey with a white Olde English D on left front, with white name and back numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training Road

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020, the Tigers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, a blue jersey with an orange Olde English D on left front, with orange name and back numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

Special Events Jerseys

1980s St. Patrick's Day

The Tigers also participated in the Spring Training St. Patrick's Day fun of wearing green trimmed uniforms. This one is from the 1980s, but the specific year it was used is unknown. This jersey is signed by then-Tigers' owner and Domino's Pizza tycoon Tom Monaghan, who bought the team in 1983. He said buying the team "fulfilled a childhood dream."

© GameWornGuides.com

1992 Turn Back the Clock to 1932

Warren Waterman Collection

The 1992 Turn Back the Clock to 1932 game jersey is interesting in that it is knit but with navy felt lettering, made by Russell.

Both the Tigers and the home Indians teams wore the 1932 uniforms of their teams on this July 31, 1992 contest, 60 years to the day of the Indians first game at that stadium.

The baseball card photographer was busy that day, and there are many cards from this game.

Thanks to Warren Waterman, Tigers collecting fanatic who tell us, "I purchased a 1992 Tigers Turn Back the Clock to 1932 jersey, from the team, at Comerica Park, at last night's game. About three years ago, I had noticed it among the racks in their 'authentics' inventory room. There was only one. Nobody knew what it was, or from when, but they didn't want to sell it either. Then there it was, in your 2012 Edition… I have a good relationship with the team's charity foundation, and before last night's game, their authentics director and I went into the Tigers' inventory room, and we found it after a lengthy search. It is a Russell, size 42. The word Detroit and number(s) are in felt. Very, very cool.

Above: 1932 photo of Mickey Cochrane shows that the replica uniforms are very accurate.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995-1996 Negro Leagues Tributes (1920 Detroit Stars)

1996 jersey has slightly bolder back numbers, lacks the 1995 sleeve patch.

1920 DETROIT STARS

On July 8, 1995, the Detroit Tigers began a tradition that has continued now for decades. This was the year of their first Negro Leagues Turn Back the Clock game.

Stars pinstriped knit uniforms for 1995 were made by Russell, and feature the Negro Leagues 75th Anniversary patch on the right sleeve.

The team also wore this style twice in 1996: June 8 at home against the Yankees, and August 24 visiting the Royals, who wore gray Monarchs uniforms at home. Russell uniforms were again worn, though it is unclear if the Tigers wore the same set for both games that season.

© GameWornGuides.com

1997-1999 Negro Leagues Tributes (1920 Detroit Stars)

- The 1997-1999 Tigers' Detroit Stars uniforms were made by AIS and are identical or nearly so in appearance to each other in every year. The jerseys from these years feature the black AIS tag on front that the company used through the 1999 season.
- While I have many photos of these game worn jerseys in my archives, often the owners of the jerseys (or the sellers in the case of auction houses) do not know the year of use for their particular item. I have grouped this subset of Turn Back the Clock Stars jerseys by their identifying jock tag style.
- Back numbers use an old timey variant of the White Sox font from the late 70s and early 80s. Player uniforms in 1920 would not have used player numbers, so these are a modern convention.

Game Dates and Details

Orioles	v. Tigers	7/5/97	1949 Baltimore Elite Giants Road
Reds	v. Tigers	6/27/98	1942 Cincinnati Buckeyes Road
White Sox	v. Tigers	5/29/99	Chicago American Giants Road

© GameWornGuides.com

1998 Negro Leagues Tribute (1931 Detroit Cubs)

On June 13, 1998, the Tigers were the guests of the Royals for a Turn Back The Clock game.

The Royals dressed as the 1934 Kansas City Monarchs, and the Tigers wore the road uniforms of the independent league 1931 Detroit Cubs, rendered in wool flannel by Ebbets Field Flannels, player numbers on back and inside the body of the bear on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Turn Ahead The Clock

John Swain Collection

Below: Russell logo re-embroidered on bobbed sleeve.

Uniforms unveil glimpse of future
Lynn Henning/The Detroit News. Detroit News. Detroit, Mich.: Jul 23, 1999. pg. F.5 [Final Edition] Abstract (Summary)

Wearing new uniforms Thursday, the Tigers were supposed to offer a peek at styles we'll see in the 21st century. Ouch. Fans --and players --seemed to agree the new millennium ought to spur more imagination than Detroit's apparel showed during a game against Kansas City.

"I think ours stunk," said Bobby Higginson, the Tigers right fielder who wore one of the so-called "futuristic" ensembles, which pretty much resembled Detroit's current wardrobe, except for sleeveless shirts, and a different look to the letters and numbers on the players' shirts."

The highly tradition-conscious Detroit Tigers agreed to participate in two of these games, dressed as ballplayers might 25 years in the future. The home game was on July 22, 1999. The road game was held but with regular uniforms (see "Oddballs" section).

Unlike the other teams who participated in the odd promotion and who wore totally bizarre custom styles, the Tigers took their regular button-front jerseys and simply re-tailored them with bobbed sleeves. A special font is used for names and numbers, and the Russell "R" is re-embroidered on the top of the cut-off right sleeve.

To me, the whole scheme was perfectly clever: the Tigers haven't changed uniforms in almost 90 years… so naturally the team projected they'd still look the same 25 years in the future. A fitting response to this kooky promotion.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Tiger Stadium Finale: “No Name” Jerseys

For the final game ever at Tiger Stadium, September 27, 1999, players wore uniforms with the numbers of famous Tiger players of the past, each with no player name on back. The Tiger Stadium memorial patch was on the left sleeve. Ceremonies were held both before and after that final game. The game was capped by a dramatic grand slam off the roof by Robert Fick, wearing Norm Cash’s number 25. It was the final hit, home run and RBI at the stadium, the 11,111th one recorded there. Outfielder Gabe Kapler (far left in photo above) wore no number on his back in honor of Ty Cobb, who played before the era of players wearing numbers.

"Ladies and gentlemen, less than six months ago, we began a warm season of farewells, and with each passing day we came a little bit closer to this historic occasion.

"The Lions, Joe Louis and Nelson Mandela. Six-thousand eight-hundred and seventy-three regular season games, 35 postseason contests and a trio of spectacular All-Star Games, Tiger Stadium has been home to this great game of baseball. But more than anything, it has been a cherished home to our memories.

"Will you remember that last base hit? The last out? How about that last pitch? Or maybe it's the first time as a child when you saw that green, green grass that will forever be etched into your mind and soul.

"Tonight, we say good-bye. But we will not forget. Open your eyes, look around and take a mental picture. Moments like this shall live on forever.

"It's been 88 moving years at Michigan and Trumbull. The tradition built here shall endure along with the permanence of the Olde English "D.” But tonight we must say good-bye.

"Farewell, old friend Tiger Stadium. We will remember.”

Tigers’ announcer Ernie Harwell's farewell [edit, from Wikipedia]

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2001, 2005-2009 Negro Leagues Tributes (1920 Detroit Stars)

AIS continues as maker of this style of the Tigers' Negro Leagues tribute game uniforms in 2000-2001 and 2005-2009.

The uniforms in these seven years again are all made from the same patterns, and are probably indistinguishable from each other. They have no year or set tags on them as far as we know.

They are grouped together here because they feature the black/white/gray AIS jock tag used by that company starting in 2000.

Game Dates and Details

Royals	v.	Tigers	7/22/00	1945 Kansas City Monarchs Road
Brewers	v.	Tigers	6/9/01	1923 Milwaukee Bears Road
Indians	v.	Tigers	8/6/05	Cleveland Buckeyes Road
Royals	v.	Tigers	7/15/06	1942 Kansas City Monarchs Road
Royals	v.	Tigers	7/21/07	1948 Kansas City Monarchs Road
White Sox	v.	Tigers	7/26/08	1920 Chicago American Giants Road

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2001, 2005-2009 Negro Leagues Tributes (1920 Detroit Stars), continued

July 11, 2009 marked the 15th consecutive year that the Tigers held a Negro Leagues tribute game at home, again dressing as the 1920 Detroit Stars in uniforms by AIS. They played the Indians who were attired as the 1948 Cleveland Buckeyes.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002-2004 Negro Leagues Tributes (1930 Detroit Stars)

For three consecutive years, the Tigers dressed as the 1930 Detroit Stars for their home Negro Leagues tribute game.

These cream-colored AIS knits have a red star outlined with navy on the left chest and Varsity numbers in the same colors on the back.

The three dates/ opponents were:

- Pirates, June 29, 2002 as the 1935 Pittsburgh Crawfords
- Royals, July 26, 2003 vs. 1945 Kansas City Monarchs
- White Sox, July 31, 2004 as the Chicago American Giants

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

Above: Tigers are wearing their 2006 current-issue road pants. The 1969 uniform pants had no knit trim on the sides.

- On July 9, 2006, the Tigers turned back the clock to 1969 vs. Seattle Mariners, who dressed as the 1969 Seattle Pilots.
- While original uniforms from 1969 were made of flannel, these reproductions are rendered in modern double knit.
- At far left and center, an original 1969 road jersey and a similar-era player photo.
- The replicas are pretty good copies by Majestic, though the numbers on the sleeves are a bit too tall and are not quite bold enough compared to the originals. Front wordmark is slightly taller than the original.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007 Turn Back the Clock to 1977

These AIS knits were made to replicate the pullover-style uniforms worn between 1972 and 1984. Notice the appropriately small back numbers and tall names. The game was played on June 2 against the 1977-attired Indians in Cleveland.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Turn Back the Clock to 1909

On June 14, the Tigers and Pirates wore throwback uniforms to commemorate the 100th anniversary of both Forbes Field and the 1909 World Series between the two teams.

Block bold numbers used on back even though numbers were not used back then. Very oddly, both teams wore home white uniforms in this contest, though the Tigers' were slightly off-white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Negro Leagues Tribute (1939 Detroit Stars)

Steve Kraljic Collection

On August 1, 2009, the Tigers visited the Indians for a Negro Leagues tribute road game. The Tigers dressed as the 1939 Detroit Stars in road gray, the Indians as the 1946 Cleveland Buckeyes in home whites. The Tigers uniforms are made by AIS, with navy "Detroit" on front with underline, the "I" in Detroit dotted with a star. Numbers on back in single-color navy Varsity font sewn in tackle twill. .

Jersey knit trim is red, on sleeve ends, placket, and across the shoulder tops.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010 Negro Leagues Tribute (1920 Detroit Stars)

June 12, 2010: The Tigers host the Pirates for a Negro Leagues tribute game.

The Tigers wore one of their “usual” uniforms: that of the 1920 Detroit Stars; the Pirates wore 1931 Pittsburgh Crawfords road gray uniforms.

The Detroit Stars uniforms are identical to the ones the Tigers have worn on many earlier occasions, with the exception that the 2010 edition has the “EH” Ernie Harwell memorial patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 St. Patrick's Day

After a long break from participating in St. Patrick's Day greenery (they wore only green caps in recent years), the Tigers wore these identical green batting practice jerseys in 2011, 2012, and 2013. All white lettering, jersey features white side and shoulder panels.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 Turn Back the Clock to 1944

1944
Original

June 22, 2011: The Tigers visited Los Angeles in an interleague game with the Dodgers. The Dodgers were wearing their 1944 throwback uniforms for that day's game, and the Tigers obliged by wearing Majestic replicas of their 1944 suits.

An original 1944 jersey is shown (inset, left). These 2011 copies were fairly good, though not exact, with the exception of the back numbers being the wrong font (they were Block with Serifs/Bold, and should have been a variation of the Red Sox font).

1944's wartime stars and stripes shield is correctly on the left sleeve, the Tigers 2011 Sparky Anderson memorial patch is on the right.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 Negro Leagues Tribute (1930 Detroit Stars)

Steve Kraljic Collection

July 16, 2011: For the 17th consecutive year, the Tigers held a Negro Leagues tribute game at home. They dressed this year as the 1930 Detroit stars, in uniforms made by AIS. These uniforms are identical to ones worn by the team in tribute games 2002-2004.

The Tigers' 2011 opponents were the White Sox, who dressed as the 1920 Chicago American Giants.

The Tigers' jerseys featured the 2011 Sparky Anderson memorial patch on the right sleeve. Red/navy Varsity numbers on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Negro Leagues Tribute (1930 Detroit Stars)

05/19/12 5:12 PM ET

Tigers pay tribute to Negro Leagues

By Anthony Odoardi and Jason Beck/MLB.com

DETROIT -- To celebrate the 18th Annual Negro Leagues Tribute Game and Tenth Annual Negro Leagues Weekend, the Tigers invited several former players from different teams to be honored at Comerica Park. On Saturday, as both the Tigers and Pirates donned the throwback uniforms of the Detroit Stars and Pittsburgh Crawfords, nine former players held a question and answer session on the concourse for fans prior to an on-field tribute.

They relived the days of their baseball careers, covering everything from how much their paychecks were -- most averaged $300 a month -- to the speed of their fastballs -- none of the pitchers said under 100 mph -- to their experiences with Jackie Robinson and Satchel Paige.

Minnie Forbes once played third base for the Kansas City Monarchs and Grand Rapids Black Sox before she took over the Stars and became the third female owner in Negro Leagues' history. Forbes, who has been part of the festivities before, was excited Saturday.

"I'm just honored to be here today and to be able to be recognized with the Detroit Stars," said Forbes on stage in front of crowd of fans gathered before the game in Comerica Park. "The organization was founded in 1919 and to be represented in their honor, thank you."

Other players included Jake Sanders, Pedro Sierra, Bill Hill, Joe Douse, Ron Teasley, Alton King and Melvin Duncan. All shared their stories before taking turns throwing out the ceremonial first pitch.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1979

Steve Kraljic Collection

On June 30, 2012, Detroit visited Tampa bay for a Turn Back the Clock to 1979 game. The Tigers pullover uniforms were made by Majestic and were very accurate, though as is my common complaint, they were tailored to fit quite a bit looser than any player would have worn them in 1979. Back numbers and player NOB are the correct size for a 1979 jersey. Team tagging below the jock tag shows the year “1979.”

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1976

On August 11, just six weeks after their Turn Back the Clock to 1979 game at Tampa, the Tigers participated in a Turn Back the Clock to 1976 game at Texas. The Tigers had worn the same style uniform in both 1979 and 1976, so it would be reasonable to assume that they could simply wear the same set of uniforms as they had worn in Tampa Bay on June 30, right?

Wrong. The home team is usually responsible for ordering (and paying for) both teams' uniforms for Turn Back the Clock games, and the Rangers opted to order a new set of uniforms rather than try to arrange for the reuse of the uniforms from the Rays' game. True also, the home team gets to sell the uniforms to fans after the game, and perhaps the Rays were more interested in that option.

These uniforms are close in appearance to the June 30 set, except the back numbers are incorrectly larger, and they add the Tigers' 1976 Bicentennial patch to the left sleeve, which depicts a stylized version of the fountain in Hart Plaza in downtown Detroit. Team tagging below the jock tag shows the year "1976."

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Negro Leagues Tribute (1930 Detroit Stars)

The 2013 game on April 27 pitted the Braves dressed as the Atlanta Black Crackers against the Tigers as the 1930 Detroit Stars. Virtually identical to the versions worn in other years and most recently in 2012, these AIS uniforms do not have manufacturer tagging sewn on the outside of the tail as has been the practice in other years (in 2001, the tags were inside the back hem). Bold varsity numbers in red outlined with navy are the only customization for the players. No names are used.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2013 Memorial Day

All teams in the majors wore military-desert-camouflage-lettered uniforms for their May 27 games. The Tigers hosted the visiting Braves and wore these special home jerseys with the front wordmark, back numbers and player name on back sewn in tan-shaded camo twill, making the writing very hard to see.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013-2015 Hispanic Heritage

On August 3, 2013, the Tigers wear special uniforms for first time, on this, their 8th annual Hispanic Pride day in 2013. They spelled out the word "Tigres" across the front with an underline, adding a front number, looking very much like the short-lived, 1960-only home uniform (below). Jersey backs are lettered identically to regular home uniforms. On August 2, 2014 and August 8, 2015 , the same jersey style as had been debuted in 2013 was revisited each year. All navy lettering on Cool Base white jerseys; 2014 year tagging on the tail, as shown top left. 2015 has Majestic QR code tagging.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2015 St. Patrick's Day

The 2014 and 2015 editions of the Tigers' St. Patrick's Day jersey is made from the same patterns as their new-for-2014 home batting practice jersey, simply substituting kelly green for all that is normally navy blue. Team worn jerseys are year tagged as shown. The 2015 version has the Joker Marchant Stadium patch.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2015 Negro Leagues Tributes (1920 Detroit Stars)

These May 24, 2014 and April 25, 2015 games mark the 14th and 15th times the Tigers have worn the home uniforms of the 1920 Stars, including during the team's first such tribute game in 1995, and last worn in 2010. AIS uniforms now have the jock tag sewn inside the tail instead of on the outside.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Memorial Day

On the road for Memorial Day 2014, May 26 in Oakland vs. the Athletics. The Tigers uniforms, featuring camo outlined with orange and white on light gray fabric, made the lettering very hard to see from the seats.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Memorial Day

The Tigers' May 25, 2015 Memorial Day camo jerseys are identical to the prior year, and again, camo/orange/white twill on light gray fabric makes the lettering very hard to see from a distance. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/ white rather than its typical colors from 2014.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys, making the royal blue trim look a little strange in contrast with the navy in the lettering, but certainly not as bad of a clash as other teams. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Tigers modify their home white jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in red, including their front logo as well as back numbers. The Tigers are one of four teams (with the Royals, Yankees, and Dodgers) whose lettering goes from one layer to two for this special promotion. Player names on back are in red. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1945

In an August 19 game, the Tigers visit the Cubs and both teams wear 1945 uniforms to replicate that year's World Series matchup. The Tigers' Majestic knits feature single-color blue lettering for the front scripts and back numbers, which are in the Red Sox/ McAuliffe font. Aside from the modern tailoring, these throwbacks are very faithful to the originals, from the sizing and position of the wordmark to the proper player numbers fonts on back. The 1943-1945 "Stars and Bars" patch correctly adorns the left sleeve.

1945 Original

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2017 St. Patrick's Day

The Tigers go green for St. Patrick's Day in 2016 and 2017. This Flex Base jersey is in solid green, with front logo, back numbers, and player name in white. The home jersey version of the Old English "D" is used both years, despite the team moving to the cap version for BP and Spring Training jerseys in 2017. The right sleeve sports a white shamrock, a feature shared by many teams for the 2016-2017 St. Patrick's Day promotion. White knit trim encircles both sleeves. The 2017 version has the white background/blue border version of the Mr. I memorial patch on the left sleeve.

2017

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Mother's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Tigers wear their home white jerseys with the front logo, player names, and back numbers in pink. All jersey trim, normally blue, also becomes pink.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Tigers apply the camouflage trimmings to their road gray jerseys for the game on May 30. The typically three-color front lettering and front and back numbers are rendered in two-color woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black. Like other teams, their trim elements are also changed to single-color black from the usual blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Negro Leagues Tribute (1920 Detroit Stars)

Steve Kraljic Collection

For the 16th time, the Tigers bring out their 1920 Detroit Stars home uniforms for their annual Negro Leagues Tribute Game on June 4. The 2016 entry is the first made by Majestic and is constructed of full weight knit. There are slight variations in the lettering; for instance, the back numbers are slightly bolder. But otherwise, they remain almost identical to the long-running AIS version of this look.

Derrick Damian Collection

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016 Father's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms Father's Day, Sunday, June 19. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The Tigers wear their road gray jerseys with the typically three-color lettering in the front logo and front and back numbers reduced to light blue with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Tigers are on the road and wear their road jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Tigers select the blue twill version with red outlines to replace their normally three-color front lettering and front and back numbers, with a red player name on back. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2019, 2022-2023 Hispanic Heritage

2016

The Tigers continue on with their "Tigres" jerseys in Majestic Flex Base from 2016-2019, and after a two season hiatus, again on Nike's version of Flex Base in 2022-2023. The design remains the same from previous years, with "Tigres" script and underline across the front with a front number. The back is identical to their usual home jerseys. Worn on August 6, 2016; August 12, 2017 (with "Mr. I" memorial on right sleeve); August 11, 2018; June 15, 2019 (with no MLB150 patch on right sleeve); August 19, 2022 (with KB memorial patch, right sleeve); and August 5, 2023.

Steve Kraljic Collection

2017

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Mother's Day

Pink-trimmed Mother's Day jerseys return on May 13-14, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic heat applied vinyl locker tag and team inventory tag inside the bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon glued on left chest; the pink Majestic sleeve logo; and the dark pink/light pink/white ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter applique stitched on the back of the collar. All multi-colored lettering is done in the lightweight-twill style. The Tigers wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Memorial Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Tigers apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 27-29, 2017.

Top left: Note that Flex Base jerseys are the standard for these promotions, but Victor Martinez apparently asked for a set to be made for him in knit.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Father's Day

Light blue-lettered and trimmed Father's Day jerseys return on June 17-18, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic tagging and set tagging at the inside bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon glued on left chest, the light blue Majestic embroidered sleeve logo, and the dark royal blue/light blue/white back collar ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter patch. The Tigers wear home white with all lettering rendered in single-color light blue, while all jersey trim, normally dark blue, also turns light blue. The 2017 jersey also includes the "Mr. I" memorial patch for Mike Ilitch, the Tigers owner who passed away in February 2017.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Negro Leagues Tributes (1930 Detroit Stars)

The Tigers bring back their 1930 Detroit Stars uniforms on July 1, 2017 (night game of a doubleheader) and June 9, 2018, both made in Cool Base material by Majestic, after several seasons by AIS. The style is much the same, cream jerseys with red/blue star on front left, blue knit trim around the collar and placket and near the ends of both sleeves, and red/blue Varsity Bold numbers on back. The look is completed with contrasting dark blue buttons. In 2018, the jersey also features the white-bordered “Mr. I” memorial patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill – appropriately in red or blue. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1 (day game of a doubleheader) and 2-4, 2017, the Tigers wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill for all front and back lettering. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. All jersey trim is single-color blue. The 2017 jersey also includes the "Mr. I" memorial patch for Mike Ilitch, the Tigers owner who passed away in February 2017.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25-27, 2017, the Tigers wear jerseys with gray bodies and orange sleeves with white nicknames and orange numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide orange/white/orange trim. The front features a script "Tigers" logo, taken from the team's wordmark logo, here rendered in navy/orange/white kiss-cut lightweight twill. The 2017 jersey also includes the "Mr. I" memorial patch for Mike Ilitch, the Tigers owner who passed away in February 2017.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018-2019, 2021 St. Patrick's Day

Steve Kraljic Collection

The 2018 St. Patrick's Day jersey, in all its green glory, is identical to the 2017 model save for one very important element – the Tigers' legendary "D" logo. As the logo is updated across the Tigers' identity in 2018, so too, it is updated on their St. Patrick's Day jersey. Oddly, though, the new "D" was present on Spring Training and BP jerseys the year prior, just not for this event. Perhaps they had some old stock to use up first. The jersey was used again in 2019 and 2021. A set was made for the team in 2020, but it was not used due to the COVID pandemic shutdown of Spring Training.

Similarly, a set was made in 2022, but Spring Training was delayed by labor negotiations, and the Tigers started their spring slate of games on March 18, one day to late to wear them.

Note that the Majestic style code for this jersey changed from DCGO to DGC8 with the updated logo.

2017

2018

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Negro Leagues Tribute (1921 Detroit Stars)

The Tigers sport a Negro Leagues tribute uniform every year, but on May 6, 2018 on the road against the Royals, they break out a style they've never tried before: the 1921 Stars road uniform. These gray Majestic full-knits with navy pinstripes sport a navy sun collar, navy "DETROIT" on front and player numbers on back in the same "WIld West" font as the 1976-1981 White Sox "leisure suit" jerseys and a red twill star on the left sleeve. And judging from the photo of the original team, they look pretty good. A nice tribute, and a nice touch to break out a new uniform to honor a team of the past.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Memorial Day

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, with dark olive green lettering and numbers. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are again simplified to single-color black, and a green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, is stitched to the right sleeve. The Tigers apply this style to their home white jerseys on May 26-28, 2018, using single-color olive green on all lettering and numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Independence Day

The 2018 Independence Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017 featuring printed twill with a pattern of stars and stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the lettering, red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging, and a ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 2-4, 2018, the Tigers wear their road gray jerseys with red patterned twill/blue front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. All jersey trim is single-color red.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year; a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly-colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24-26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The Tigers wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and orange sleeves with white nicknames and orange numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide orange/white/orange trim. The front features a script "Tigers" taken from the team's wordmark logo, here rendered in navy/orange/white kiss-cut twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1968 Road

The Tigers honor the 50th anniversary of their 1968 World Series victory with a throwback to that year's road uniform, at home, on September 8, 2018. The Majestic Cool Base jerseys aren't exact - the "DETROIT" on front is a little less bold than in 1968 originals. The anniversary patch on the left sleeve is, of course, a modern addition. In the 1968 World Series, there was quite a bit of variation between left and right sleeve numbers, and number fonts (see photos at left), likely as a result of older uniforms being mixed in, or the use of multiple manufacturers. The version represented here settles on what was likely the most common variation of the day.

1968

© GameWornGuides.com

2019, 2022-2023 Negro Leagues Tributes (1920 Detroit Stars)

These are the 17th, 18th, and 19th times the Tigers have worn their 1920 Detroit Stars uniforms for their annual Negro Leagues Tribute games. For the August 10, 2019 game, the second (and final) version by Majestic changed to Cool Base fabric from the full-knit of the last incarnation, in 2016. Otherwise, they are identical to those last used in 2016. When they return for June 18, 2022 and July 22, 2023, they are the same as the 2019, with the addition of the Nike logo and tagging. Of note, Detroit's 2020 Negro Leagues throwback game was canceled with the shortened season, and the Tigers wore a sleeve patch to commemorate the Stars in 2021 at home, rather than throwback uniforms. They did not wear Negro League uniforms in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23-25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Tigers wear a black version of their road jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Negro Leagues Tribute (1920 Detroit Stars)

The Tigers visit Kansas City to take on the Monarchs-clad Royals for a Negro Leagues tribute game on May 23. Detroit throws back to the 1920 Stars, a familiar and oft-used tribute for them, but this time, in road gray. These gray Nike full-knits with navy pinstripes sport a navy placket, navy “DETROIT” on front (with a white “R” to contrast on the placket) and red player numbers on back in a similar “Wild West” font as the 1976-1981 White Sox “leisure suit” jerseys. A red twill star with a white, kiss-cut outline completes the look under the front lettering. Though quite similar to the home version the team wears frequently, the front lettering is much bolder than the home jersey, while the back numbers appear to be somewhat less bold - a curious variation.

© GameWornGuides.com

Prototypes and Oddballs

1976-1978 Prototype Home?

Here we have what looks to be a pro-spec Tigers jersey from the mid-to-late-70s, made by Rawlings, who was not the team's manufacturer at the time. We surmise this date from the Rawlings tag, which was used from around 1972-1984, and from the use of Mark Fidrych's name and number. Fidrych played for Detroit from 1976-1980 and was a phenom in his rookie year. Rawlings made Tigers road jerseys for several years in the flannel era, in 1978, and in the late 1980s. It is possible that they made this up for consideration to take over the home jerseys from longstanding manufacturer Wilson, but they were not successful. Note the unusual "2" used here, in a hybrid Varsity similar to what Rawlings used for the Padres, and what Wilson used for the Astros at this time. The Tigers did not use this style, and ultimately, they did not contract Rawlings for home jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

1985 Oddball: Lou Whitaker's All-Star Game Jersey

If someone showed you a gift shop Tigers jersey with its number drawn on in magic marker and told you it was game worn from the 1985 All-Star Game, you might consider believing him.

In that game, Tigers star Lou Whitaker reportedly left his uniform in his car back at the airport, and was forced to improvise just before the game. From a Metrodome concession stand, he obtained an adjustable mesh hat and a blank souvenir jersey, borrowed a pair of white pants, shoes, an Indians batting helmet from American League teammates, and found a pair of Twins stirrups from the host team (the bottom of the T-C logo is visible in the full-body photo). He finished off his outfit by scrawling his number on the back in Magic Marker. He did not attempt to write his name on the back, though his real jersey would have had one.

The AL lost the game, 6-1. The Smithsonian requested the jersey, it was given to them by Mr. Whitaker, and it remains a part of their collection to this day. Above right: Even this grainy shot from television reveals that the gift shop jersey isn't even of authentic grade, it is the cheaper, thin knit "fan style."

(Sources: ESPN.com's Uni Watch, TheBaseballPage.com and Wikipedia.)

© GameWornGuides.com

1970s Spring Training?

Steve Kraljic Collection

I have come across a few of these over the years. They are pullover jerseys, identical in fabric and trim to the Tigers' 1972-1984 road jerseys, with a D on the front similar to the team's home jersey. My research suggests that they may have been Spring Training jerseys used in Lakeland, FL in the 1970s and early 1980s, or they could have been strictly minor league jerseys made for a Tigers minor league club. However, Tigers collectors say that the team's minor league affiliates did not wear the Gothic-D which was exclusively the mark of the MLB Tigers, who wore gray jerseys with the word "Tigers" in script (as shown below). Notice also that the minor league jerseys below use a different back number font then the jersey in question,Which uses the Tigers' major-league style number font. I've not been able to find photos of this jersey in use, so our jury is still undecided.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-1993 Prototype Alternate

1995 –as worn for a single game

Here's an unusual prototype that was offered at auction from the Detroit Tigers website. Made by Russell in full knit, it appears to be a prototype for what would have been an alternate jersey, with tagging from 1992-1993. The Tigers ultimately adopted a similar jersey for one game in 1995, but that one has many differences as shown from the photos above. This earlier prototype reverses the colors of the back numbers and adds a name on back in orange, as well as orange knit trim around the neck and placket. In addition, it has a white outline around the front logo, which the 1995 jersey lacks. When the 1995 alternate debuted, new team president John McHale, Jr. was unaware of its existence. "I was in our office, and I remember somebody came up to me and told me we were working out in [something] other than our home uniforms," he said in an article on mlb.com "This was completely the first word I had heard about this, so I went down to the clubhouse to see what was going on." Clearly, someone on the team's staff had been working on the concept for a while, even if they didn't let the new president in on it. Considering how the alternate went over, one wonders how long that staffer remained with the team.

© GameWornGuides.com

1994 Prototype Batting Practice

This variant on the 1994-1995 batting practice jersey featured orange outlining around the blue “D”. The version adopted had a white outline instead. This is most likely a design prototype prepared by Russell for team consideration (Inset, right: as adopted)

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock Road Game That Never Was

?

Bill Henderson Collection

- According to the MLB promotional events schedule, the Tigers and the Red Sox were scheduled to play the final 1999 Turn Ahead the Clock contest on Sept. 18, 1999 in Boston.
- However, we are told that the uniforms' sewing was delayed because of Hurricane Floyd. The game went on without the special uniforms, and the on-field costume party was never rescheduled.
- Perhaps it is just as well. This bizarre navy blue jersey with the tiger tail wrapped around the back might have been the one planned to be worn for the Tigers' second TATC game, but never saw action.
- The artist's rendering at far left was the jersey that was originally planned for the event. Perhaps the navy one shown above "in the cloth" was a prototype? So far we have not been able to find any more information on this game that was never played, and we have never found an actual jersey resembling the one drawn at left.
- I have, however, seen a couple of these orange and navy Tiger-tail jerseys, but never one that was team lettered. The one above was lettered in what we believe is the correct style by Patsy Elmer of Big Time Jerseys. (www.bigtimejerseys.com)
- I do not know how many were made for retail sale, but they are likely to be as scarce as the proverbial hens' teeth.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2002 Oddball Road

This gray-bodied jersey with the Tigers “D” on the front would probably not have garnered a second look from me if not for a combination of factors. The first is its Rawlings “Authentic Collection” tail tag, seen 2000-2002 when Rawlings briefly re-entered the market as a provider of on-field uniforms to MLB teams. The Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the neck was affixed to on-field authentics only starting in 2000, though it is in standard red/white/blue and not the Tigers’ blue/white/blue combination.

The Tigers never wore a gray “D” jersey, but perhaps Rawlings was making a design proposal? We’ve now found two of them, both shown here. Several teams abandoned Russell for Rawlings in 2000, and it is possible that Rawlings supplied prototypes to try to win the Tigers’ business. Odd, however is the red sleeve-end Rawlings logo that would normally have been color keyed to the team’s logo.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2012 Mystery Turn Back the Clock (to 1988?)

Here we have two mysterious examples of a Tigers Turn Back the Clock jersey. How do we know? The interior wash tagging for both jerseys has a “62TBH” code used on team-issued throwbacks. Otherwise, it looks just like what the Tigers have worn for years, and without seeing that code, we might never know that these were supposed to be throwbacks.

The Majestic tag places this between about 2000-2012, and during that time, Majestic made jerseys for the Tigers from 2005-2012. Both are lettered and numbered for former Tigers players Steve Searcy (49) and Luis Salazar (12). Given the former player names and numbers, it is possible these were made for a ceremony we have not discovered. Searcy played for Detroit from 1988-1991, and Salazar only in 1988. As such, our first thought was that the team was celebrating the 1988 Tigers, a team that had a good season but faded late, so that seems unlikely. Perhaps there was another reunion for which these were made that we have not uncovered. Either way, given the Tigers consistency of uniform style over the years, it is funny to think of these needed to be labeled as “62TBH” throwbacks, since any Tigers jersey of the 2005-2012 era would have looked exactly the same!

If any readers have more info about these jerseys, please send it our way!

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010(?) Prototype Long-Sleeved Batting Practice

I came across these for sale on eBay in early 2009, and wonder if these are possible prototype long-sleeved batting practice jerseys.

Both are made of the 2007-2010 Cool Base batting practice jersey material with a heat-applied “D” logo on the front chest, similar to 2007-2010 BP jerseys. Note the two different styles of side/underarm panels shown here. The one with orange/white panel mimics the short-sleeved BP jerseys the Tigers wore that year. Also, on the all-blue jersey, note the small flag tag on the seam of the jersey, which is similar to numerical size tags used only on team issued batting practice jerseys from this era.

© GameWornGuides.com

Minor Oddities…

1972: This locker room photo shows #33 Frank Howard with a vertically arched name on back. Also pictured, this gray jersey appeared at auction with the same vertical arch name font.

2010: The "t"'s are crossed… but the "i" is not dotted.

1972 Frank Howard Detroit Tigers Game Worn Jersey

Road jersey is all original. Frank Howard was 6'7" and 225 pounds when he played outfield in the Majors for 16 years, mostly for the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Washington Senators. Howard was formerly a basketball star for Ohio State University. He was the 1960 National League Rookie of the Year, played in four All-Star Games, and hit 382 home runs. Later he managed the San Diego Padres and the New York Mets. This jersey was from the next to last season of his career, when he played the end of the 1972 season for the Detroit Tigers. Big jersey, it has Wilson tag in the collar written in size that has faded, but the jersey measures as a 54 - Howard was a very big man. "DETROIT" across the front and "HOWARD" and "33" sewn on the back - the name is sewn directly on the back. Strip tag on front tail is "54 72 Set 2". The 54 is the size and 72 the year. Shows moderate use. Again, this is all original and a beautiful jersey.

Sold for: $3,037.20

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Prototype Road Batting Practice

While doubtlessly dozens of prototypes are made for teams' consideration each year, we only ever get to see a few of them that make it to the outside. This jersey is made in the 2011-2013 style (button front and full-length mesh side panels) but it lacks a Majestic jock tag on the tail as would normally be found, yet it has a Majestic store paper hang tag as if it had been made for retail sale. I checked with my contacts at Majestic's retail sale group, who did not recognize it as theirs, but in my view this is too perfect in its details to be a fake.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Prototype Flex Base

The Cool Base-tagged jersey is similar to the regular issue until one looks closely. It is actually a prototype of the Flex Base jersey template adopted in 2016, with a few changes. The main difference is that the numbers and letters are not tackle twill and sewn on. They are heat pressed and appear like mesh (lower left). However, it has vented mesh side panels and the back tail of the jersey is a sewn-on, thinner mesh fabric like current Flex Base jerseys. The wash code tag in the inside tail reads "063T." There is a strip tag on the tail that reads “24 52 ‘12 Test A” stitched on.

That would decode to “player #24, size 52, 2012 Test A.” The photos of Miguel Cabrera are from Spring Training 2012, where he was wearing a similar jersey, if not the same one shown here. Majestic claimed to work with more than 50 players when developing the Flex Base jerseys, and we have seen a few other “Test A” jerseys like this out there. It is very possible there are even more.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Prototype Spring Training Home/Road

This matched set of home and road #16 PLAYER lettered Spring Training jerseys was offered for sale by the Tigers on the MLB.com auction site. The patterned twill used in 2016 is used for the back lettering. For sample jerseys, it is common for the manufacturer to use the issue-year as the jersey number, and the name on back “PLAYER”.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Opening Day Home

Presented here is what looks like any other Tigers home jersey from 2018 onward. However, noted on the team tagging is that this is a Tigers "Opening Day" home jersey. This is the first we've seen of this type of tagging, and it was likely included to enhance the jersey's resale value after the game. We assume a whole set that was created for the team this way. Given the controversial change to the Tigers' Olde English "D" logo that happened with the team's home jerseys that year, this tagging would denote the first time this style of Tigers jersey took the field.

The MLB authentication for this jersey shows it as team issued, which makes sense, as the player for whom it was made, Derek Norris, was released by the club at the end of Spring Training in 2018.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020 Oddball Nike Home Sample

Like every other MLB team, the Tigers switched from Majestic to Nike for the 2020 season. This unusual example lines up to similar (strange) samples we've seen for other teams around the same time.

This jersey's possible pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, the player number "20" represents the year for which the sample was made. The use of "Nike" as the player name, rather than "Player" is unusual for MLB samples, however, Nike has done this for samples made in other sports in the past, and we have seen other examples in baseball as well, though not frequently.

Since the Tigers were not changing their uniform design for 2020, this sample was likely made just so the team could see their jersey with the new Nike branding. Most of those had "0730" coded wash tags and heat-pressed neck tags, indicating that they were likely made before the final decisions on Nike branding were completed. We do not have an image of the wash tag for this one, so we can't be sure what code was there. However, on the other "Nike" name on back sample we have seen (for the Rangers) the tag code was 0890, Nike's eventual number for their version of this style of jersey. Thus, it is possible that this is a later version of a 2020 sample, though it lacks some typical prototype tagging that would support this. Without closer inspection or more detailed photos, it is hard to know for sure, but we offer it here for reference nonetheless.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020, 2022 Unworn St. Patrick's Day

2020

2022

In both 2020 and 2022, the Tigers made up sets of St. Patrick's Day green jerseys that were never worn. The 2020 version was scrapped because of the COVID shutdown. The 2022 jerseys were victims of a labor dispute that delayed Spring Training, forcing the Tigers to start their slate of spring games on March 18, one day too late for the wearing of the green.

Even though the jerseys were not used on the field, they were sold by the team online with MLB authentications noting that they were team issued.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Prototype City Connect

The Tigers City Connect jersey premiered in 2024, so it has been built on the Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template from its unveiling. Here is a prototype or sample of that jersey, that matches what the team eventually wore on the field. Of note, the back numbers are perforated, which is accurate to the final jersey. Also, despite the VPE template, which usually has sleeve-end trim sewn in, this style has sewn-on trim because of its width, which also matches the final version

Note the sample information that is on the Nike tag, which reads "TIGERS CC JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT", with "CC" meaning City Connect, and 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples, which were usually size 46. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the "FQ4072-462" text on the front tag means. It is likely they it is an internal production code, as all 2024 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered. Most start with a "D" so this one is something of an outlier with the "F" as the leading letter.

Below: A closeup of a tag used in photos released by the team with the announcement of the City Connect jerseys. Note the same style code and information as the tag on the prototype shown here (above), but the "2" in the bottom corner is in a different handwriting, and the QR codes point to different information as well. Clearly, at least two "copies" of this specific prototype exist, and others could be out there as well.

© GameWornGuides.com

Commemorative Patches

Tigers Patches

2010, after May 4

1976

1999

2000

2001

2005

2011 Spring Training

2011 Spring Training

2011

2015 Spring Training

- 1976: 1776-1976 Detroit patch (USA Bicentennial).
- 1999: Tiger Stadium final year, left sleeve home jersey only.
- 2000: Opening of new Comerica Park; the timing of the patch's issue precluded including the name of the new park's sponsor, Comerica Bank..
- 2001: Detroit 300 – Tricentennial.
- 2005: MLB All-Star Game.
- 2010, after May 4: "EH" memorial for broadcaster Ernie Harwell.
- 2011, Spring Training: 75th Anniversary of Spring Training in Lakeland, FL.
- 2011: Sparky Anderson #11 Memorial.
- 2015, Spring Training: 50th anniversary of Joker Marchant Stadium, on all jerseys - white, blue and gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017: "Mr. I" patch to honor Mike Ilitch, Tigers owner who passed away in February 2017. Worn all season including Spring Training.

Spring Training version has navy lettering on white background (blue border for home, orange for road), regular season is reversed to have navy background and white lettering. (white border for home, orange border for road).

Above*: Spring Training 2017; Below: Regular season.

Above:* Home jersey patch has white border.

Far right:* Road patch has orange border.

© GameWornGuides.com

August 12, 2018

August 26, 2018

September 8, 2018

- 2018, August 12: Jack Morris number retirement, right sleeve of home jersey.
- 2018, August 26: Alan Trammell number retirement, right sleeve of home jersey.
- 2018, September 8: World Series anniversary worn only on the 1968 Turn Back the Clock jersey.
- 2020: “6” disc for Al Kaline, white border for home jersey, orange border for road jersey. Worn on right sleeve.
- 2021, July 31: Detroit Stars patch to honor 100th anniversary of Negro Leagues. The Tigers did not wear a Negro Leagues throwback uniform at home this season, so this patch stood in its place. Worn on left sleeve of home uniform.
- 2022: “KB” disc for coach Kimera Bartee, who passed away in December 2021. White border for home jersey, orange border for road jersey. Worn on right sleeve.
- 2022, August 6: Lou Whitaker Number Retirement patch, left sleeve of home jersey.

2020

July 31, 2021

2022

August 6, 2022

© GameWornGuides.com

2023-2025 Tigers Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Tigers struck a sponsor patch deal with Meijer, a retail chain. The patches first appeared on May 25, 2023.

The patch is white with the Meijer logo in blue on the home jersey, and blue with an orange/white border with the Meijer logo in white on the road jersey. The team also wears two different patches for its blue Spring Training jerseys in 2023-2025, and because these jerseys are listed in the MLB Style Guide as possible alternates, we list them here as well, even though they are only used in spring. Both have a blue rectangle, the home version has the sponsor name in white, while the road version has it in orange.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player.

© GameWornGuides.com

Tigers Postseason Patches

2006 World Series
(right sleeve)

2013 AL Division Series
2013 AL Championship Series
(right sleeve)

2012 World Series
(right sleeve)

2014 AL Division Series
(right sleeve)

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

John Hiller 1970 Game Worn Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 2, 2021 Certification Number: 21-1102J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1970 Detroit Tigers Wilson seven-button cream colored flannel home jersey of pitcher John Hiller. Wilson tail tagging denotes size 42, though it generously measures 44 around the chest, reasonable to have been worn by the 195 lb. player. Classic Tigers gothic "D" stitched in Navy-Blue cotton twill (not polyester tackle twill) to the left chest. A single corse of Navy soutache rings the placket. On back, in the same Navy cotton twill, Hiller's name in the correct 3 1/8" tall font for the year, above a single color Navy #18 in the Tigers' variant of Wilson Varsity. The jersey is signed on the upper right chest in ballpoint pen and again on the numeral "8" on the back. I have no professional opinion on the authenticity of autographs. A JSA hologram sticker (for the autograph(s)) is affixed to the back 8 with the serial number of 5591945.

Mostly used as a reliever throughout his career, Hiller pitched in 47 games in 1970, only 5 as a starter. He compiled a 6 - 6 record in 104 innings pitched with a respectable 3.03 ERA. He is perhaps best known for, as a 27 year old, suffering and then recovering from a heart attack following that 1970 season, an attack that doctors told him would certainly end his career. After missing the 1971 season, he mounted a comeback in 1972 and worked his way through the Tigers minor leagues, being called up to the big leagues July 7, 1972. In the last half of the 1972 season, Hiller helped the Tigers to the American League East pennant. He appeared in 23 games and posted a strong 2.03 ERA. He also pitched in three games in the 1972 American League Championship Series against the Oakland Athletics, and was the winner of Game 4.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's small rectangular tag noting the size of the jersey as 42 is stitched into the lining on the back of the collar. It is the proper style tag as was used 1969-1973. Both its right and left edges are badly frayed as is typical with well-washed examples. On the left outside front tail is a 2 1/4" x 1" rectangle of cream colored felt, with the hand chain stitched "70 Set 1" in the familiar style of the long-time factory Wilson stitcher. While it is still attached firmly around the edges, shrinkage has caused the the tag to split across its middle, its poor condition matching other well-used exemplars.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good, game used condition. The cream colored flannel remains thick and supple. Aside from streaks of rust colored stain (which could be tobacco) on the middle of the front, it is unblemished. The twill lettering is still dark, though the thread holding it all on place has bleached to a dark violet, indicative of a season's worth of washing. Cotton twill required a very dense stitch to hold it in place to prevent fraying. An examination of the stitching on the inside of the jersey shows that all is original. My judgement is that this jersey was removed from use after 1970 and was spared repeated duty in spring training/minor leagues which was the fate of so many other Tigers jerseys. Notably, with the team's 1972 switch to double knit jerseys the old flannel uniforms of 1970-71 were quickly rendered obsolete.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition and appears all original. The jersey has no contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by John Hiller of the 1970 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

John Wockenfuss Game Worn 1975 Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 16, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1116J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Detroit Tigers home jersey, team tagged 1975. White, seven button Wilson button front jersey in size 42. Tigers' Gothic "D" on the left chest, player numbers and name arched above on back in Navy blue. The placket is lined with white linen for player comfort, a characteristic of Wilson pro-model jerseys. A single corse of thick blue soutache rings the placket. The 1976 Detroit commemorative patch is stitched to the left sleeve. The patch itself appears to be an original one, but its stitching tells me it is not original to this jersey. It may well be covering the mark from an original patch that had been there, we cannot know without removing it. "WOCKENFUSS" name on back is crudely rendered in a condensed font that was almost surely hand drawn; some of the letters are different sizes from each other. Listed at 6'0" and 190 lbs, the jersey size is reasonable for the player, especially if worn early in his career.

John Wockenfuss enjoyed a twelve year MLB career with the Tigers and Phillies mostly in the role of backup catcher. 1975 was his second season in baseball, and he appeared in 35 games for the Tigers, hitting .229 with 4 home runs in 118 at bats.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's small rectangular tag noting the size of the jersey as 42 is stitched into the lining on the back of the collar. It is the proper style as was used 1974-1977. On the left outside front tail is a 2" x 1" rectangle of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, hand chain-stitch embroidered "75 set 2" in the familiar embroidery-handwriting of the long-time Wilson factory stitcher. Tagging matches exemplars of other 1975 Tigers jerseys in our photo library. On the neck tag, someone has written a "4" in black marker; I do not know the meaning of that mark.

Wear & Repairs/Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey wore #14 on the back with Wockenfuss' rather long name arched above. A light table examination showed that number had been preceded by an earlier "45". Checking the Tigers' roster, the catcher wore #45 1974-1976 and then wore #14 in 1977. As presented, the number 14 on back showed less fading of the number than the name on back, telling me that it was added later. I deem the name on back to be original, and no other name was ever on this jersey. The Tigers were a notoriously frugal organization, and especially in the 1970s, reissuing jerseys as backups or for spring training to players year after year. But for this jersey to have been used with two different numbers on back over the course of three seasons is exceedingly cheap, even for the Tigers. I would judge the number change to have been made by the team, and if it was worn in these three seasons it likely did at one point have the 1976 patch on the sleeve. This style patch would have been removed by the team when the jersey's use was carried into 1977.

Continues on reverse

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

This jersey shows very heavy wear, and as received was very stained and dirty-gray. The lining in the back of the collar has been restitched in in a few places at it had been coming detached. All of the lettering, front and back, originally Navy Blue was detergent-bleached to a dull medium purple. All including the team crest on the front, showed shape distortion from repeated hot water washing. The jersey's owner wanted it to return its configuration to the original 1975 player number and wanted it to present well. We elected to remove and replace all lettering, back and front, so that it would all match.

After stripping the jersey, I worked with am appropriate solvent to remove much of the thick glue that had been used to apply the later-issue number 14. I then hand-washed the garment and mildly bleached it to get it clean. The results were very good, it is now a consistent off-white color, and while the fabric is thin from use, there are no holes or serious damage apparent. Using the light table as my guide, I recreated the name on back to exactly match the original hand-drawn letters in all their imperfection. The ghosts of the back numbers exactly matched my template for the team numbers as used in 1975. I stitched all lettering is it would have been done originally. On the light table, the ghost of the later-added #45 on back is still easily visible.

Above, jersey as received, showing later-season replacement numbers that are darker than the other lettering on the jersey which is original. At left, a scan of the front "D" at left shows the distortion that occurred compared to the original pattern after dozens of washings. When replacing the element, I cut it properly shaped, and then hand-puckered the fabric underneath to make the ghost outlines fit the appliqué.

Conclusion: This jersey in is in fair to good professional restored condition. It has a team-issue tagging from 1975, but evidence suggests it was used again in both 1976 and 1977. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to 1975 team specifications and worn by catcher John Wockenfuss of the Detroit Tigers. The fact that the name on back was original tells me that throughout its life it was worn by the catcher, and it avoided a tour of duty in the minor leagues which was the fate of s many Tigers' jerseys of the time.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ron LeFlore Game Worn "Rookie" 1974 Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: May 28, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0529J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is Ron LeFlore's Detroit Tigers 1974 rookie home jersey. Wilson neck tagging, denotes size 44, correct for the player at the start of his career. White, seven-button jersey body with the classic Tigers gothic "D" stitched in Navy-Blue twill to the left chest. A single corse of navy soutache rings the placket. On back, LeFlore's name in the correct font for the year, above a single color Navy #8 (sewn upside down) in the Tigers' variant of Wilson Varsity. The inside of the placket is lined with white linen for player comfort. A light table examination clearly shows that the number 42 had been on this jersey previously; the name is untouched. LeFlore was an August 1974 call-up by the Tigers, when he wore #42 in his rookie season. He batted .260 in 59 games. In 1975 his number was changed to 8. I would surmise that this jersey was re-used in Spring Training 1975 with his new number, and might have been kept as a backup jersey during the 1975 season. LeFlore's signing by the Tigers out of Jackson State Penitentiary following his troubled youth is well documented, and was the subject of both a book and a Hollywood movie. He was promoted quickly to the majors after excelling in the minor leagues, and enjoyed an eight-year MLB career with three teams. He was an American League All-Star in 1976.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's small rectangular tag noting the size of the jersey as 44 is stitched into the lining on the back of the collar. It is the proper style as was used 1974-1977. On the left outside front tail is a 2" x 1" rectangle of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "74 44"(1974 size 44) hand chain-stitch embroidered on it in the familiar embroidery-handwriting of the long-time Wilson factory stitcher. While normally the tail tag would include a third number, 1 or 2, referring to its set number, this is missing that element, which is reasonable as it was likely stitched as an extra jersey at the start of the season and was supplied probably blank-backed to the clubhouse manager specifically to be used for mid-season player additions. "49" is written in black marker on the neck tag.We have concluded that the Tigers' equipment manager specified a unique and seemingly random inventory code number sewn on every jersey issued, which certainly must have correlated back to an inventory spreadsheet that we have no access to.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examinations shows that the number "8" that is now in place had been preceded by an earlier "42" that appears to have been roughly removed, tearing a small hole in the jersey fabric near the top of the numbers. The number 8 that is now sewn centered on the jersey is affixed upside down, the stitching pattern shows it was done on a different machine than the name on back sewn above it. The hole in the jersey is crudely stitched closed underneath the 8. These careless sewing characteristics are all typical of the way jerseys were modified and repaired in the Tigers' clubhouse for quick re-use, as opposed to the neater, more professional work done by Wilson at the factory. There is evidence of the removal of a round sleeve patch that was likely the 1976 Bicentennial one, suggesting use in a third season. All is judged to be original and without contrivance. The jersey body has grayed from its original bright white, and this jersey retains its original front Tigers crest and Navy soutache trim, as well as all its original tagging. The Navy soutache trim is in better than normal condition for Tigers jerseys of this vintage, as on most examples it usually becomes fuzzy and puckered from too many hot water washings. All seven of the buttons are intact and appear to be the originals. All stitching is tight and somewhat bleached; there is characteristic softening of the edges of the twill lettering from wash and wear. My judgement is that this jersey was removed from use after 1975 and was spared a third tour of duty in spring training/minor leagues which was the fate of so many other Tigers jerseys of this time.

Continues on reverse

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Light table image showing ghosts of original call-up number #42 on back, and ghost of removed 1976 sleeve patch.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition and appears all original. The jersey has no contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Lance Parrish Game Worn 1979 Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: May 26, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0526J04

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is Lance Parrish's 1979 Detroit Tigers set 1 home jersey. Wilson neck tagging, denotes size 44, correct for the player at the start of his career. Pure white, seven-button jersey body with the classic Tigers gothic "D" stitched in Navy-Blue twill to the left chest. A single corse of navy soutache rings the placket. On back, Parrish's name in the correct font for the year, above a single color Navy #13 in the Tigers' variant of Wilson Varsity. The inside of the placket is lined with white linen for player comfort. The jersey is autographed in blue Sharpie on front left below the team crest, and on the center of the back between the numbers with a different pen. I have no professional opinion on the autographs. 1979 was the year that Parrish took over as the team's number one catcher, replacing Milt May. He played in 143 games batting .276 with 19 home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's small rectangular locker tag noting the size of the jersey as 44 is stitched into the lining on the back of the collar. It is the proper style as was used 1978-1985. On the left outside front tail is a 1 3/4" x 1" rectangle of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "79 1" hand chain-stitch embroidered on it in the familiar embroidery-handwriting of the long-time Wilson factory stitcher. Centered below this is a small square tag, with the number "17" hand chain stitched in the same size and style. We have concluded that the Tigers' equipment manager specified a unique and seemingly random inventory code number sewn on every jersey issued, which certainly must have correlated back to an inventory spreadsheet that we have no access to.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examinations shows that all lettering is original and without contrivance. The jersey body has yellowed slightly to a shade of ivory from its original bright white, and this jersey retains its original front Tigers crest and Navy soutache trim, as well as all its original tagging. The Navy soutache trim is in better than normal condition for Tigers jerseys of this vintage, as on most examples it usually becomes fuzzy and puckered from too many hot water washings. All seven of the buttons are intact and appear to be the originals. All stitching is tight and unbleached; there is characteristic softening of the edges of the twill lettering from wash and wear. While it exhibits some fabric pulls, it notably does not show the piling that is typical from catchers' equipment straps on the shoulders or around the waist. The linen placket lining is intact and even relatively clean, with a few dots of rusty stains. There are no team repairs, and jersey is in very good, as-worn condition.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition and appears all original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Lance Parrish of the 1979 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Letter of Restoration

Lance Parrish Game Worn 1984 Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 15, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1115J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Detroit Tigers 1984 set 1 home jersey, Wilson tail tagging, denotes size 46, Pure white, seven-button jersey body with the classic Tigers gothic "D" stitched in Navy-Blue twill to the left chest. A single corse of navy soutache rings the placket. Typical of Wilson professional model jerseys, the inside of the placket is lined with white linen for player comfort.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's small rectangular locker tag noting the size of the jersey as 46 is stitched into the outer left front tail, though the stitching holding in place is coming loose. It is the proper style as was used 1978-1985. Below it is stitched a rectangle of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "84 1" hand chain-stitch embroidered on it in the familiar embroidery-handwriting of the long-time Wilson factory stitcher. Centered below this is a another small square white knit fabric tag, with the number "13" hand chain stitched in the same size and style. We have concluded that the Tigers' equipment manager specified a unique and seemingly random inventory code number sewn on every jersey issued, which certainly must have correlated back to an inventory spreadsheet that we have no access to. It may be purely coincidence that the "13" used here was also Parrish's uniform number.

As Received/Restoration Performed: As received, the jersey was very dirty and had the number "19" on the back. The light table revealed that the numbers were not original, as ghosts showed beneath each. Above the numbers there is clear evidence of the name removed "GLEATON" leaving behind both stitching outlines and glue/dye staining. Also evident is the fainter (earlier) outline of the name PARRISH. There is also evidence that a nameplate had once been on this jersey. Notably the Tigers do not use nameplates except in rush/emergency situations or in spring training. It is clear that this jersey had been reissued at least twice in its life of use. I removed the numbers 19, and after doing so, I could see clearly that the number 13 had once been there, Parrish's number in 1984. Size 46 is reasonable for Parrish to have worn. Other credibly authenticated examples show him wearing size 44 1977-79, and size 46 in 1983.

In 1984, Lance Parrish was in his eighth season with the Tigers; he was their primary catcher and played in 147 games. He hit .237 and with 33 home runs. Parrish helped lead the Tigers to the 1984 World Series championship, was selected as an All-Star eight times (1980, 1982–1986, 1988, 1990), and won six Silver Slugger Awards (1980, 1982–1984, 1986, 1990) and three Gold Glove Awards (1983–1985). Over his 19 MLB seasons, he compiled a .252 batting average with 324 home runs, and 1,070 runs batted in (RBIs). At the time of his retirement, he ranked fourth in major-league history in home runs by a catcher and seventh in games played at the position. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Jerry Gleaton wore #19 and pitched for the Tigers as a reliever 1990-1991, in 1990 he appeared in 57 games with a 1-3 record and had 13 saves, with a 2.94 ERA. (Baseball Almanac) Gleaton could have worn this jersey in the regular season, or it could have been issued to him only for use in spring training. The Tigers were a notoriously frugal organization that saved and reissued team jerseys regularly; it is not at all unreasonable that a jersey originally issued in 1984 was still hanging around the clubhouse to be reissued in spring training 1990, especially one that was a larger size like this one. The fact that Gleaton's name was stripped from the jersey and signs that a nameplate had once been on it all bolster the thought that this jersey was reissued multiple times.

Restoration Performed: The ghosts on the back of the jersey for both the names PARRISH and GLEATON and the ghost of the original number 13 exactly match my templates for the Tigers in this period. With appropriate solvents, I aggressively cleaned the dried glue that was underneath the replacement number 19, and then laundered the jersey. I cut exact replacements for Parrish's name and number, and using the light table placed them exactly over the original ghosts and stitched them in place. The light table will still reveal the outlines of the replacement 19 as well as the outline of Gleaton's name (see attached photos).

Wear & Repairs: Notably, even though it shows signs of all these name and number changes, it is still in very good condition. It is not badly worn at all. After washing, it is remarkably clean with some minor stains. While it exhibits some fabric pulls, it notably does not show the piling that is typical from catchers' equipment straps on the shoulders or around the waist. The linen placket lining is intact and even relatively clean. This jersey retains its original front Tigers crest and Navy soutache trim, as well as all its original tagging. The Navy soutache trim is in better than normal condition for Tigers jerseys of this vintage; only slightly fuzzy. On most heavily used examples it usually becomes very fuzzy and puckered from too many hot water washings. All seven of the buttons are intact and appear to be the originals. All stitching is tight and unbleached; there is characteristic softening of the edges of the twill lettering from wash and wear. I would judge that all told, it shows about a season's worth of wear.

Above, light table images show the competing ghosts of both the numbers 13 and 19, as well as the outlines of the names Parrish and Gleaton, also showing evidence of the outline of a nameplate that had once been on this jersey in its multiple lives.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good as-restored condition without contrivance. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and originally issued to and worn by Lance Parrish of the 1984 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Kirk Gibson #23 Game Worn 1987 Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: March 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0301J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is Kirk Gibson's 1987 Detroit Tigers set 1 home jersey. Wilson "Prestige Teams" tail tagging, size 44. Pure white, seven-button jersey body with the classic Tigers gothic "D" stitched in Navy-Blue twill to the left chest. A single corse of navy soutache rings the placket. On back Gibson's name in the correct font for the year, above a single color Navy #23 in Wilson Varsity. The inside of the placket is lined with white linen for player comfort. Gibson spent 12 of his 17 years in Major League Baseball with the Detroit Tigers. In 1987, mainly as the team's starting left fielder, Gibson batted .277 in 128 games played and hit 24 home runs.

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey was one of a massive collection of approximately 400 worn jerseys that had been warehoused in Tiger Stadium. Typical of MLB practice at the time, these jerseys had been used in the majors, then in Spring Training and/or the minor leagues. Just prior to the Tigers' move to their new ballpark in 2000, they were sold to a wholesaler in a large lot. They then sat in storage for more than twenty years.

When received, this particular jersey retained its front "D" and the original Navy soutache, but had been stripped of Gibson's name and number. A smaller plate had been sewn over the spot where the name had been , and light table evaluation showed that besides Gibson's 23, the number 59 had once been sewn on it as well. As received, it was very dirty and it had been completely stripped of its back lettering though their ghost outlines were very clearly visible on the light table.

Using team templates as a starting point, replacement lettering identical in both shape and placement to Gibson's original 1987 issue were cut from navy tackle twill and then the lettering was mildly media blasted and/or organically dyed to harmonize its appearance to the rest of the jersey. The lettering was placed with aid of the light table completely covering the original ghosts, and the jersey was thoroughly washed and remaining traces of glue and dye staining from the second set of numbers applied after Gibson's MLB use were carefully, professional erased, only in the spots necessary. The glue outlines from the original Gibson player lettering remains beneath the restored lettering and can be seen in the photos on the next page.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: In 1987, Rawlings took over as the "Official Supplier" of uniforms to MLB. However, teams who had existing contracts in place with other makers were allowed to continue these relationships if they desired, but only Rawlings had the right to sell on-field spec jerseys to the public, and only Rawlings was entitled to stitch its makers-mark on the jersey sleeve. The Tigers had a long standing relationship with Wilson and elected to continue it for 1987.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

The Wilson tag is 2 x 3 and made of a shiny satin-like polyester material, sewn around its perimeter onto the outside front left tail of the jersey and is embroidered in red and black with the words "Tailored Exclusively for Prestige Teams by Wilson", followed by four lines of embroidered detailed wash instructions. The bright red Wilson wordmark logo was embroidered in the center, superimposed floating over a smaller embroidered pink Wilson "W" in a circle. A white flag tab noting the size (44) is pinch sewn under the right edge. Beneath the Wilson locker tag is a smaller rectangle of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "87 1" hand chain-stitch embroidered on it in the familiar embroidery-handwriting of the long-time Wilson factory stitcher. Finally centered below this is a third square tag, with the number "29" hand chain stitched in the same size and style. We have concluded that the Tigers' equipment manager specified a unique and seemingly random inventory code number sewn on every jersey issued, which certainly must have correlated back to an inventory spreadsheet that we have no access to.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original front Tigers crest and navy soutache trim, as well as all its original tagging. Characteristically, the trim has shrunk from repeated washing, and it as has become fuzzy and puckered. All seven of the buttons are intact and appear to be the originals. There are no team repairs, and jersey is in very good condition especially considering that it has served at least two tours of duty in its lifetime. The linen placket lining is intact and even relatively clean. The back of the jersey has been accurately restored as described prior.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Kirk Gibson of the 1987 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Dave Bergman #14 Game Worn 1990 Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: March 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0301J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is infielder Dave Bergman's Detroit Tigers set 1 1990 home jersey. Bergman hit .278 in 1990 with 205 at bats. Wilson "Prestige Teams" tail tagging, no size tag but measures as a size 44; Pure white, seven-button jersey body with the classic Tigers gothic "D" stitched in Navy-Blue twill to the left chest. A single corse of navy soutache rings the placket. On back Bergman's name in the correct font for the year, above a single color Navy #14 in Wilson Varsity. The inside of the placket is lined with white linen for player comfort.

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey was one of a massive collection of approximately 400 worn jerseys that had been warehoused in Tiger Stadium. Typical of MLB practice at the time, these jerseys had been used in the majors, then in Spring Training and/or the minor leagues. Just prior to the Tigers' move to their new ballpark in 2000, they were sold to a wholesaler in a large lot. They then sat in storage for more than twenty years.

When received, this particular jersey retained its front "D" and the original Navy soutache, but had been stripped of Bergman's name and number, still clearly visible on thyme light table. It was very dirty and it had been completely stripped of its back lettering yet never re-lettered for another player.

Using team templates as a starting point, replacement lettering identical in both shape and placement to the original 1990 issue were cut from navy tackle twill and then the lettering was mildly media blasted and/or organically dyed to harmonize its appearance to the rest of the jersey. The lettering was placed with aid of the light table completely covering the original ghosts, and the jersey was thoroughly washed. The shadow outlines from the original Bergman player lettering remains beneath the restored lettering and can be seen in the photos on the next page.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: In 1987, Rawlings had taken over as the "Official Supplier" of uniforms to MLB. However, teams who had existing contracts in place with other makers were allowed to continue these relationships if they desired, but only

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Rawlings had the right to sell on-field spec jerseys to the public, and only Rawlings was entitled to stitch its makers-mark on the jersey sleeve. The Tigers had a long standing relationship with Wilson and elected to continue it for 1987 and beyond.

The Wilson tag is 2 x 3 and made of a shiny satin-like polyester material, sewn around its perimeter onto the outside front left tail of the jersey and is embroidered in red and black with the words "Tailored Exclusively for Prestige Teams by Wilson", followed by four lines of embroidered detailed wash instructions. The bright red Wilson wordmark logo was embroidered in the center, superimposed floating over a smaller embroidered pink Wilson "W" in a circle. Beneath the Wilson locker tag is a smaller rectangle of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "90 1" machine embroidered on it, matching exemplars. Finally centered below this is a third square tag, with the number "17" machine embroidered in the same size and style. We have concluded that the Tigers' equipment manager specified a unique and seemingly random inventory code number sewn on every jersey issued, which certainly must have correlated back to an inventory spreadsheet that we have no access to.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original front Tigers crest and navy soutache trim, as well as all its original tagging. Characteristically, the trim has shrunk from repeated washing, and it as has become fuzzy and slightly puckered. All seven of the buttons are intact and appear to be the originals. There are no team repairs, and jersey is in very good condition especially considering that it has served at least two tours of duty in its lifetime. The linen placket lining is intact and even relatively clean. The back of the jersey has been accurately restored as described prior.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Dave Bergman of the 1990 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Al Kaline #6 Game Worn 1973 Detroit Tigers Road (Set 2) Jersey

Examination Date: February 23, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0223J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray pullover Wilson double knit jersey set 2 1973 road jersey. Wilson neck tag notes the size as 44. (marked and measured) Sewn in knit 3/4" blue/white orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim at the end of the sleeves. "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. On back, Kaline's name and number are original and correct for the year, name on back is Navy Blue above a Navy outlined with orange #6 in the Tiger's own variant of Wilson Varsity. Kaline wore a size 42 jersey for much of his later career. I have previously authenticated a matching 1973 "Set 1" road jersey in size 42. It is perfectly reasonable to assume that Kaline, who was accustomed to a size 42 jersey, had jerseys of each size made for his use in 1973, in the next to last year of his career. Notably, the size 44 shows more wear than the 42.

Staring with the Tigers in 1953, Kaline played all 22 years of his MLB career with the team, well earning the nickname "Mr. Tiger". 1973 was his next-to final season. He was selected to 18 All-Star Games, including selections every year between 1955 and 1967. He was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1980, his first time on the ballot. He retired soon after reaching the 3,000 hit milestone near the end of the 1974 season. (Wikipedia). In 1973 he played in 91 games, splitting his time between designated hitter, right field and first base.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson size 44 neck tag shows wear and is attached only at the top and bottom, the thread on either side has failed. It is the correct style for 1973, and includes four lines of embroidered detailed wash instructions. "18" has been written in black marker on the tag. On the lower left of the front tail is a strip of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with 73 44 set 2 hand chain-stitch embroidered in Navy thread, in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher, matching exemplars. The embroidery and stitching thread is faded and bleached slightly purple showing wash/wear.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original front DETROIT crest, as well as all its original tagging. The knit trim colors are still bright and unfaded; the white is slightly yellowed. The lettering shows evidence of many washings, as the twill has turned purplish from detergent and the sheen has been burnished off. All attaching thread is slightly bleached, and there is characteristic jersey fabric puckering beneath the lettering indicating it is original and undisturbed. There are some stray dirt scuff marks on the front lower left tail. There are no team repairs, all stitching is intact and tight, and jersey is in very good condition and clearly was pulled and spared being used in the minor leagues or spring training in later years, likely owing to respect for Kaline's star-status.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good, used condition: It is all original, showing appropriate use. The jersey has has team-issue tagging, and no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Al Kaline of the 1973 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Mickey Lolich 1974 Detroit Tigers Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: July 29, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0729J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is pitcher Mickey Lolich's Detroit Tigers set 2 road jersey. Gray Wilson size 48 V-Neck pullover jersey with sewn in knit 3/4" blue/white orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim at the end of the sleeves. "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. On back, tall Tigers 3 14" Navy Blue name on back arched above a Navy outlined with orange #29 in the Tigers' own variant of Wilson Varsity. Size 48 matches other jerseys worn by Lolich in the 1970s.
The jersey is autographed on front chest by the player in bold black marker. I have no professional opinion on the autograph, but it has been professionally authenticated by Beckett.

Lolich enjoyed a 16 year MLB career, thirteen of them with the Tigers, 1962-1975. Lolich pitched in 41 games for the 1974 Tigers and posted a record of 16-21 with an ERA of 4.15 with 202 strikeouts. (Baseball Almanac) In a 16-year major league career, Lolich played in 586 games, accumulating a 217–191 win–loss record along with a 3.44 earned run average. He struck out 200 or more batters in a season seven times in his career. His 2,832 career strikeouts were the most by a left-handed pitcher in Major League Baseball history until he was surpassed by Steve Carlton in 1981 and, he held the American League record for strikeouts by a left-handed pitcher until being surpassed by CC Sabathia in 2017. His 2,832 strikeouts ranks 20th all-time and fourth among left-handed pitchers behind Randy Johnson, Carlton and Sabathia. Lolich threw 41 shutouts and 195 complete games during his career, completing nearly 40 percent of his starts. He holds Detroit Tigers team records in single-season strikeouts (308), career strikeouts (2,679), shutouts (39), games started (459) and home runs allowed (329). (Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturer locker tag is the correct style as used 1974-1977 and is stitched on the back of the neck, and denotes the size as 48. Sewn on the outside front left tail is a 1x3" rectangle of gray double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "74 48 2" hand chain-stitched embroidered on it in the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher, matching exemplars.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that all lettering and tagging is original and without contrivance. The orange/blue neck and sleeve knit trim has not faded from exposure to the sun and repeated washing as is so common on these jerseys. There is evidence of light to moderate use, with characteristic puckering of the twill and the fabric beneath the lettering from hot water washing. It was clearly spared post-1974 relegation to Spring Training and /or the minor leagues, and the associated abuse typical of Tigers' jerseys of the 1970s.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good all-original condition. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Mickey Lolich of the 1974 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Mark Fidrych 1976-1977 Detroit Tigers Autographed Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: December 29, 2021 Certification Number: 21-1229J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Detroit Tigers Wilson-made pullover road jersey. Gray V-Neck pullover jersey with sewn in knit 3/4" blue/white orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim at the end of the sleeves. Pullover V-Neck body with "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. On back, Fidrych's name and number are in the correct fonts and sizes for 1976-1977. name on back is Navy Blue above a Navy outlined-with-orange #20 in the Tigers' own variant of Wilson Varsity. The jersey is autographed on the very edge of the back shirt tail, 'Mark Fidrych "The Bird"' in black Sharpie. I have no professional opinion on the autograph.

Enjoying a short but famous career, Fidrych was a rookie phenom for the 1976 Tigers and started the 1976 All Star game for the American League. He finished the 1976 season 19- 9 with a 2.39 ERA, the lowest among starters in MLB. and he appeared headed for sure stardom. yet his career spanned only five years, 1976-1980 all for the Tigers, he was injured during spring training in 1977 and over the next four seasons he won only ten more games in total. He retired after the 1980 season and left baseball.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: There is a small rectangular Wilson tag in the neck of the jersey noting it as a size 42, reasonable for the player. The specific style of the Wilson tag is one used only 1974-1977, and since Fidrych's career began in 1976, it could only be from these two years. This jersey lacks Tigers team tagging, significant because among all the teams in MLB, the Tigers have been the most consistent in tagging all of their game-worn uniforms. Normally, a strip of knit fabric would have been zig zag stitched to the bottom of the outside left tail with the year and set number on it (see next page for an example). This jersey lacks such a tag or any evidence that one had been there before. Also, the Tigers wore a special team Bicentennial sleeve patch disk in 1976 — there is no sign that this jersey even had such a patch on its sleeve. There is a faint ghost of a small rectangular stitch pattern near the bottom of the same tail, showing that something had been sewn there and removed, but it is at such a haphazard diagonal angle and odd location I would not judge it to have been a team inventory tag because of its inconsistent shape and placement.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original and lack contrivance. A careful comparison of the fonts matching this jersey to known team-prepared ones shows it is quite exact, however, without team tagging, it is difficult to assert that this jersey is Fidrych game worn, yet given the total accuracy of all the sewn elements (fonts, sizes, colors) I would judge that it was stitched by Wilson at the same shop as team jerseys. Consider the circumstances- Fidrych quickly became a cultural pop sensation in 1976, even appearing on the cover of The Rolling Stone magazine. Yet baseball was still a full decade away from offering on-field specification MLB jerseys to the public, and was even further away from large-scale sponsored player signing events. It is very probable that this jersey was stitched by Wilson at the factory as a spare jersey for the player to wear, or probably one to be signed and auctioned or given as a gift to a special team associate (sponsor, business partner). We have no insight into how it came to be autographed, but I will note the location of the autograph on the very bottom of the back tail is rather unusual.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is in excellent condition, and might be considered to have signs of light use as seen as some burnishing of the lettering and graying of the white stripes in the sleeve end and neck trim, indicating it was worn and washed before it was autographed. This jersey retains its original arched front two-color DETROIT crest. The orange/blue neck and sleeve knit trim has not faded from exposure to the sun and repeated washing as is so common on these jerseys.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent condition: it is properly team-prepared with lettering that matches specifications. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It lacks team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for Mark Fidrych of the 1976-1977 Detroit Tigers.

Above left, Henderson's 9th Edition MLB Game Worn Guide reference page showing the style of Wilson tag found on this jersey as used only 1974-1977. Above right, the neck tag from the jersey being examined. Below, left an example of typical 1976 Tigers team-issue road jersey team tagging that is NOT present on this exemplar.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Lance Parrish 1983 Detroit Tigers Set 1 Road Jersey

Examination Date: May 26, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0526J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is catcher Lance Parrish's Detroit Tigers road jersey, set 1, 1983. Gray V-Neck pullover jersey with sewn in knit 3/4" blue/white orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim at the end of the sleeves. Pullover V-Neck design "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. On back, Parrish's name and number are in the correct fonts and sizes for 1983. name on back is Navy Blue above a Navy outlined with orange #13 in the Tigers' own variant of Wilson Varsity. Size 46 as is correct for the player at this stage of his career. The jersey is autographed somewhat lightly in silver fine tip pen on back numeral 3 by the player. It is autographed again in black Sharpie on the left lower front tail. I have no professional opinion on the autographs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturer locker tag is the correct style as used 1978-1985, is stitched on the back of the neck, and denotes the size as 46. Sewn on the outside front left tail is a 1x3" rectangle of gray double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "83 1" (1983 set 1) hand chain-stitched embroidered on it in the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher, matching exemplars. Below this is another smaller square of the same fabric with the number "1" hand chain stitched on it. Tigers jerseys often have these secondary numeric tags on them which likely relate to internal inventory codes.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original arched front two-color DETROIT crest, as well as its original tagging. Surprisingly, the orange/blue neck and sleeve knit trim has not faded from exposure to the sun and repeated washing as is so common on these jerseys. There is evidence of fabric pulls and notable piling on the back of the shoulders and sides of the shirt, at the waist, as well as around the edges of the back numbers expected and caused by the abrasion from the catchers' equipment Parrish wore on the field. The lettering shows evidence of use and washing, with some burnishing and puckering of the fabric. There is a small hard glue-like stain below the "P" in Parrish on back, about the size of two grains of rice. There are no team repairs; all stitching is intact and tight, and jersey is in very good condition. It appears to have escaped the repeated spring training and minor

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

league reuse and abuse typical of Tigers' jerseys of the 1970s. This jersey shows slightly more use than the near-identical "set 2" Parrish road jersey of 1983 that we examined at this same time.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition: the lettering front and back is all original, and the jersey is properly team-prepared with lettering that matches specifications. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Lance Parrish of the 1983 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Lance Parrish 1983 Detroit Tigers Set 2 Road Jersey

Examination Date: May 26, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0526J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is catcher Lance Parrish's Detroit Tigers road jersey, set 2, 1983. Gray V-Neck pullover jersey with sewn in knit 3/4" blue/white orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim at the end of the sleeves. Pullover V-Neck design "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. On back, Parrish's name and number are in the correct fonts and sizes for 1983. name on back is Navy Blue above a Navy outlined with orange #13 in the Tigers' own variant of Wilson Varsity. Size 46 as is correct for the player at this stage of his career. The jersey is autographed somewhat lightly on back numeral 3 by the player in silver pen, and inscribed "1983 Game Used". I have no professional opinion on the autograph.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturer locker tag is the correct style as used 1978-1985, is stitched on the back of the neck, and denotes the size as 46. Sewn on the outside front left tail is a 1x3" rectangle of gray double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "83 2" (1983 set 2) hand chain-stitched embroidered on it in the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher, matching exemplars. Below this is another smaller square of the same fabric with the number "2" hand chain stitched on it. Tigers jerseys often have these secondary numeric tags on them which likely relate to internal inventory codes.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original arched front two-color DETROIT crest, as well as its original tagging. Surprisingly, the orange/blue neck and sleeve knit trim has not faded from exposure to the sun and repeated washing as is so common on these jerseys. There is evidence of fabric pulls and piling on the back of the shoulders and sides of the shirt, expected and caused by the catchers' equipment Parrish wore on the field. The lettering shows evidence of use and washing, with some burnishing and puckering of the fabric. There are no team repairs; all stitching is intact and tight, and jersey is in very good condition. It appears to have escaped the repeated spring training and minor league reuse and abuse typical of Tigers' jerseys of the 1970s.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition: the lettering front and back is all original, and the jersey is properly team-prepared with lettering that matches specifications. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Lance Parrish of the 1983 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Bárbaro Garbey Game Worn 1985 Detroit Tigers Road Jersey

Examination Date: April 20, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0420J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is Bárbaro Garbey's Detroit Tigers set 1 1985 road jersey, marked and measured as a size 38. At 5' 10" and 170 lbs this is a reasonable sized jersey for the player to have worn. Gray double-knit Wilson-made seven-button jersey body with "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. The inside of the placket is lined with white linen for player comfort. Sewn-in knit 3/4" blue/white/orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim at the end of the sleeves. On back, Garbey's name and number in the correct fonts for the year, name on back is Navy Blue above the number 27, in Navy outlined with orange in the Tiger's variant of Wilson Varsity.

As a rookie in 1984, Garbey played in 110 games, including appearances at first base, second base, third base, designated hitter, and each of the outfield positions. He earned team Rookie of the Year honors within the Tigers organization in 1984 (Wikipedia). In 1985 Garbey returned to the roster, but was not as effective as he had been in during 1984. He appeared in 86 games with 237 at bats hitting 6 home runs and finishing with a .257 average. He was traded to the Texas Rangers after the 1985 season.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson small rectangular white tag manufacturer tail tagging sewn on the outside left tail, in the correct style for 1985, and matching exemplars for 1985 Tigers' road jerseys. Eight lines of tiny black wash instructions and the size (38) and Wilson script embroidered in red thread. Beneath the manufacturer's tag, two hand-chain stitched knit fabric tags are stacked. The top one says 85 1 (1985 set 1) and the one centered below has the number "27" on it, all embroidered in the familiar had ion the Wilson factory stitcher. While it is temping to assume that the "27" refers to the player's roster number on the back of the jersey, our research shows that the match is simple happenstance: exemplars show that the bottom tag is an inventory index tag that surely relates back to a team equipment manager's master inventory sheet where every jersey made at the start of the season was tagged with a sequential number. The Tigers employed this tagging system for many years.

Restoration Performed: When received, this particular jersey retained its original front lettering, but the back had undergone a series of changes. The "7" on the back was autographed "Barbaro Garbey 27" (I have no professional opinion on the authenticity of autographs) Without removing the current back lettering, the light table revealed several facts: The back numbers were off center, and the ghost images of GARBEY and 27 could be seen, both slightly offset from how the current lettering had been sewn. This is typical of an amateur, inexact restoration: a replacement name and number set are stitched on to make the jersey "correct" without regard to making the replacement lettering exactly match the ghosts in terms of font shape or placement. In this case, the numbers appeared correct while the NOB lettering was not exactly faithful to team patterns; the back numbers were stitched off-center.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

At the request of the owner, I removed all of the inexact back lettering. With the back stripped clean, and on the light table, it became visible that this jersey was also once #18. There is a vertical tear in the fabric where the "1" had been, when it was removed. Who could have worn it as #18?

1. That number in 1985 was assigned to Bob Melvin at 6' 4" and 205 he would not have fit into this.
2. Sometimes a jersey is numbered when it was readied for a player from the prior year who then gets cut or traded after spring training. But no one was 18 on the 1984 Tigers, so that is unlikely.
3. In 1986, infielder Scotti Madison wore #18. Garbey had since been traded. Madison could have been assigned this used jersey and wore it in Spring Training 1986. At 5' 11" and 195, a size 38 would have likely been a tight fit but not impossible
4. This jersey had a name on back associated with its original #18. I cannot make it out, but it seems like it was 5 (or 6) letters and ended in 'EZ'. The first letter looks like it was a C or a G. There is no one on the roster who fits that description, perhaps someone cut after Spring Training? (Perez? Chavez? Guarez?)

The removed numbers revealed that they were not a matched-sewn set. The layer stitching was different on both, though they were both the proper font and size for the 1985 Tigers, and when moved, fit exactly over the original set of ghosts that were revealed. I stripped the sloppy layer stitching on the #2, and resewed it to match team spec and the autographed #7 next to it.

I replaced the original numbers exactly over the other (original) set of ghosts visible, and they matched perfectly and were now again properly centered on the back. Using the 1985 Tigers alpha font, I matched a new player name and it fix exactly over the original set of ghosts. On the light table, the other competing ghosts are still visible, but I believe that my restoration covers the ghosts of the original lettering as had been sewn on this jersey in 1985.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original front DETROIT crest, as well as all its original tagging. The knit trim has not faded faded much from exposure to the sun and repeated washing. Six of the seven buttons are intact (the top one is missing) and appear to be the originals. There are no team repairs, all stitching is intact and tight, and jersey is in good condition. I will note that vert small sized jerseys like this one are often spared the ravages of overuse because they simply don't fit many players! The back of the jersey has been accurately restored as described prior.

Above the jersey as received. Note how the back numbers are off-center compared to "as-restored". At right, the confusing array of ghosts, showing how GARBEY 27 was applied to their jersey in two different configurations. The ghost of the number 18 is hidden in this image too. The (red circle) highlights the vertical strike of the "1" where the jersey fabric was ripped. Another indecipherable player NOB had been on this as well, the final letter "Z" is slightly visible in this photo (blue circle)

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. While it had clearly been reissued to another player after Garbey's use in 1985, It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Bárbaro Garbey during the Detroit Tigers' 1985 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Darrell Evans #41 Game Worn 1986 Detroit Tigers Road Jersey

Examination Date: March 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0301J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: This is infielder Darrell Evans' Detroit Tigers set 1 1986 road jersey. Evans played in 151 games in 1986, hitting .241 in 507 at bats with 29 home runs. He enjoyed a 21 year MLB career, five of those with the Tigers. Wilson "Prestige Teams" tail tagging, Gray jersey with sewn in knit 3/4" blue/white orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim at the end of the sleeves. seven-button jersey body with "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. On back, Evans' name and number have been restored in the correct fonts for the year, name on back is Navy Blue above a Navy outlined with orange #41 in Wilson Varsity. The inside of the placket is lined with white linen for player comfort.

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey was one of a massive collection of approximately 400 worn jerseys that had been warehoused in Tiger Stadium. Typical of MLB practice at the time, these jerseys had been used in the majors, then in Spring Training and/or the minor leagues. Just prior to the Tigers' move to their new ballpark in 2000, they were sold to a wholesaler in a large lot. They then sat in storage for more than twenty years.

When received, this particular jersey retained its original front lettering, but had been stripped of Evans' name and number, both still clearly visible on the light table. It was very dirty, and had a weathered and frayed blue/orange "3" centered on the back and evidence that two different sized nameplates had been sewn and removed. The number appeared to be one taken off another jersey and was sloppily stitched in place, a hallmark of Minor League/Spring Training reuse. When removed, the "3" left behind a slightly visible darker ghost on the cloth indicating it had been worn /washed many times with this number in place.

Using team templates as a starting point, replacement lettering identical in both shape and placement to the original issue were cut from navy and orange tackle twill and then the lettering was mildly media blasted and/or organically dyed to harmonize its appearance to the rest of the jersey. The lettering was placed with aid of the light table completely covering the original ghosts, and the jersey was thoroughly cleaned. The shadow outlines from the original player lettering remains beneath the restored lettering and can be seen in the photos on the next page.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturer locker tag is 2 x 3 and made of a shiny satin-like polyester material, sewn around its perimeter onto the outside front left tail of the jersey and is embroidered in red and black with the words "Tailored

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Exclusively for Prestige Teams by Wilson", followed by four lines of embroidered detailed wash instructions. The bright red Wilson wordmark logo was embroidered in the center, superimposed floating over a smaller embroidered pink Wilson "W" in a circle. Beneath the Wilson locker tag is a smaller rectangle of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with the numbers "86 1" hand chain-stitched embroidered on it in the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher, matching exemplars. Finally centered below this is a third square tag, with the number "47" also hand chain stitched in the same size and style. We have concluded that the Tigers' equipment manager specified a unique and seemingly random inventory code number sewn on every jersey issued, which certainly must have correlated back to an inventory spreadsheet that we have no access to.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original front DETROIT crest, as well as all its original tagging. Characteristically, the knit trim has faded from exposure to the sun and repeated washing. Notably, it is still bright on the undersides of the sleeves where it was not exposed to sunlight. All seven of the buttons are intact and appear to be the originals. There are no team repairs, all stitching is intact and tight, and jersey is in good condition especially considering that it has served at least two tours of duty in its lifetime. The linen placket lining is intact and even relatively clean. The back of the jersey has been accurately restored as described prior.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Darrell Evans of the 1986 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion and Document of Restoration

Alan Trammell Detroit Tigers Game Worn 1995 Blue Alternate Jersey

Examination Date: December 4. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1204J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Navy blue six-button Russell jersey issued to #3, Alan Trammell. Size 42, with Tigers alternate crest on the left chest, a large embroidered appliqué patch showing a growling tiger in orange and back, climbing through a white Gothic D. Navy/white/orange sewn-in knit trim rings each sleeve end. Player number "3" on the right chest and centered on the back in the proper size and font for the 1995 Tigers, in white outlined with orange. There is no player name on back.

This is one of the most notorious of all MLB jerseys: They were intended to be worn all season for Sunday home games. But ownership, surprised seeing them just prior to them being used on the field for the first time, disapproved of the look, and did they like the idea of jerseys without player names on back. As a result, these jerseys were eliminated after only a single game's use, on Sunday, May 7, 1995. Initially intended to be paired with pinstriped pants (according to an inside source) immediately before game time the team was reportedly ordered by team president John McHale to, "take off those clown pants" and wear their regular white pants instead. Under normal circumstances, before Tigers' game jerseys leave the premises for the final time. Each is hand initialed on the front tag by long-time equipment manager Jim Schmakel, a signal that they have been game used. Not so with this set. They disappeared from Tiger Stadium with no record. Over the years, a very few original examples have turned up at auction, while others were sent to Lakeland to be used by a Minor League squad. This jersey was in that later group.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell locker tag sewn to the outside right tail, in the variant usually seen used not later than 1994. No neck tag and small fabric 100% polyester flag tag under the Russell tail tag both proper with Russell team issued jerseys. An extremely wash-faded rectangular mylar fabric tag is stitched beneath the tail locker tag, on it is the washed out matrix printed code 95-3-42 (1995, player number 3, size 42). Someone has written "90" in black marker on that tag, probably with some relation to its minor league reissue.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

(Above) as received prior to restoration. Blue highlighted photos on this page show the light table enhanced evidence of the original front crest and the back number.

Wear & Repairs, Documentation of Professional Restoration: As received for review, this jersey was in its second life, lettered for the Lakeland Tigers and had number 47 stitched to the front and back. It shows signs of moderately heavy wear, with puckering of all elements and graying, fraying and puckering of white tagging. The numbers and front crest were sloppily stitched in place, typical of Minor League issue.

A light table examination revealed that the Tigers crest had once been on the left chest, and had been removed and replaced by the Lakeland crest. Noting the team tagging told us that this jersey had been originally issued as "#3", and we were able to see faint evidence that the numeral 3 had indeed been on the back, centered beneath the two replacement numbers, as well as on the right front. A red, white and Navy Blue Minor League Baseball commemorative patch was stitched to the left sleeve.

Satisfied that this had indeed been a MLB Tigers jersey repurposed to the Minor Leagues, I stripped all the MiLB elements from the jersey and again examined it on the light table. The former smaller MLB Tigers crest outline was clearly evident, as it had been stitched on with a tight embroidery stitch leaving clear marks. The numbers "3" on front and back were very faint, as would be expected because they probably were on this shirt very briefly some 25 years ago, and likely only washed once with them in place. The evidence of the old numbers was evident mostly on the edges from stitching fabric compression, and under ultraviolet light where slight darkening of the areas that they occupied, from the adhesive with which they had been tacked in place.

Replacement numbers in the team font were made in Tigers orange and white, and they perfectly covered the old ghosts. A crest was harvested from a donor jersey and sewn over the original marks. The Minor League Baseball patch was removed from the left sleeve. It left behind fused on hot-melt glue that was mostly removed with solvent.

Conclusion: The jersey in review shows wear that mostly occurred in its second life in the Minor leagues. It has been restored to original specifications, and is again properly lettered, and numbered, It has original authentic team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made for and worn by Allen Trammell of the 1995 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Ed Farmer Game Worn 1973 Detroit Tigers Road Jersey

Examination Date: October 7, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1007J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray pullover Wilson double knit 1973 road jersey. Wilson neck tag notes the size as 46. (marked and measured) Sewn in knit 3/4" blue/white orange knit trim around the neck and wide 2 1/2" trim bands at the end of the sleeves. "DETROIT" vertically arched across the chest in Navy outlined with orange. On back, as received, jersey sported "MORRIS" #47", which was obviously a replacement.

As Received/Restoration: At the request of the jersey's owner, I stripped the jersey to try to learn who originally wore it. In true Tigers fashion, this jersey had been reissued several times, probably finally being left with a 47 on the back with no name above it— and used in spring training. My summation is that someone added Jack Morris' name to the back to match the 47— though Morris would not join the team until 1977, and it is extremely unlikely that he was issued this ancient jersey to wear. After thoroughly cleaning the glue and staining, the light table reveals that the original number was 28, and it had also worn #88 somewhere along the way— most likely in spring training as such a high number would not have been issued on a regular season jersey then. The top edges of the number outlines were perforated to the point of creating voids in the fabric. Ghosts and scars of multiple name changes were on the back, and I could not decipher them until I put them under the high intensity black light, and the name "Farmer" suddenly became clearly visible. While comparative exemplars of Ed Farmer game jerseys at auction elude me, at 6' 5" and 210 lbs, this size is reasonable for the player .

Using the ghosts I matched the outlines to the original font patterns for the name and numbers. The largest holes in the jersey back were darned closed first (in the fashion of period's "team repairs"), the new lettering was media blasted and dyed to help it match the patina of the rest of the garment, then stitched in place using the same size/frequency of stitch to match the front wordmark and in matching faded thread.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson size 46 neck tag shows wear and yet is still firmly attached. It is the correct style for 1973, and includes five lines of embroidered detailed wash instructions. On the lower left of the front tail is a strip of double knit-cloth the same as the jersey's fabric, with 73 46 set 2 hand chain-stitch embroidered in Navy thread, in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher, matching exemplars. The embroidery and stitching thread is faded and bleached slightly purple showing wash/wear.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey retains its original two-color sewn front DETROIT crest, as well as all its original tagging. The knit trim colors are still bright and unfaded; the white is slightly grayed. The front lettering shows evidence of many washings, as the thread has turned purplish from detergent and the sheen on the lettering has been burnished. The front of the jersey is in much better condition than the back, owing to the multiple name/number changes. All front stitching is intact and tight. There were no team repairs done before I repaired the many holes in the back.

Continued on next page

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

On this page: Top left, jersey as received. Outline of #28 on back is discernible, name on back has been replaced multiple times and (far right) the resulting shadows and holes make it indecipherable, Ed Farmer was issued #28 in 1973 and under the black light his name eerily emerges. Below right, Farmer in the bullpen in late 1973- wearing what might be this same jersey. Below, Exemplar 1973 jersey I had previously authenticated showing matching characteristics to the one in review.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in fair, heavily used condition: The front is all original, showing multiple seasons of use. The back has been restored to original after multiple reissues. The jersey has has team-issue tagging, and no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by pitcher Ed Farmer of the 1973 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

Letter of Professional Opinion/Letter of Restoration

Mickey Stanley 1970-1971 Game Worn Detroit Tigers Home Jersey

Examination Date: March 7, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0307J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Either 1970 or 1971 Detroit Tigers Wilson seven-button cream colored flannel home jersey of outfielder Mickey Stanley. Wilson tail tagging denotes size 40, though it generously measures 46 around the chest. This characteristic is oddly consistent with Tigers flannels of 1970-1971 from my experience. It is a reasonable size to have been worn by the 6' 1" 195 lb. player. Classic Tigers gothic "D" stitched in Navy-Blue cotton twill (not polyester tackle twill) to the left chest. A single corse of Navy piping rings the placket, sewn into the seams, not "on top" of the seams as is soutache. The year/set tag in both 1970-1971 was made of felt, zig-zag stitched below the Wilson tag on the front left tail, and it is common that these tags fail after repeated washings and the tag centers fall out. Both years were tagged identically and the jerseys themselves were indistinguishable between this two seasons, including the use of the pencil-thin 3" tall name on back lettering, different from other years which was traditionally much larger.

Mickey Stanley played for the Detroit Tigers from 1964 to 1978. Primarily an outfielder and shortstop, Stanley was known for his versatility and strong defense. He was a key contributor to the Tigers' 1968 World Series championship team, playing a crucial role as an outfielder during the series. Over his 14-year career, Stanley posted a .242 batting average, with 93 home runs and 486 RBIs. While his offensive numbers were modest, his defensive skills, particularly his ability to play multiple positions, made him an invaluable member of the team. He retired after the 1978 season and is remembered as a solid, dependable player for the Tigers during his career. In 1970 and 1971, Mickey Stanley had notable contributions to the Detroit Tigers: 1970: Stanley played primarily in the outfield and had a solid year offensively, finishing with a career-high .267 batting average. He also posted 10 home runs and 50 RBIs, helping the Tigers in their pursuit of a competitive season. His defensive versatility, playing multiple positions, continued to be a valuable asset for the team. 1971: In 1971, Stanley's performance dipped slightly in terms of batting average, finishing at .234. However, his contributions remained critical in the field, and he was again used across various positions, including shortstop and the outfield. His flexibility allowed the Tigers to keep their lineup balanced despite injuries and other roster changes.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's small rectangular tag noting the size of the jersey as 40 is stitched onto the outer left shirt tail. It is the proper style tag as was used 1969-1973. Its left edge is badly frayed as is typical with well-washed examples. On the left outside front tail are the remains of a 1 ¾"" x 1" rectangle of cream colored felt, its center missing leaving shards of the felt and the zig-zagged stitching holding the edges in place. Its poor condition matches other well-used exemplars.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

As Received/Wear & Repairs: As received, the jersey was very dirty with assorted ground in dirt stains on the sleeves and tail and it wore the number 59 (in a non-standard MLB Tigers font) and the name FIFE sewn above. Research shows that Danny Fife was drafted by both the Tigers and the NBA Milwaukee Bucks in 1971. Fife signed with the Tigers, though he never made their MLB roster and was traded to the Twins in 1973 where he made his MLB debut. Given that the jersey has a high number and his name on back, it is my guess that Fife was invited to Tigers spring training in either 1971 or 1972 where he wore this jersey. Once stripped of the Fife lettering and the attaching glue cleaned with solvent, the jersey was soaked, hand laundered, steamed and pressed, showing that overall it remains in very good, game used condition. The cream colored flannel remains thick and supple, and the dirt and stains were removed. The twill Tigers gothic D on front has faded slightly from its original dark Navy and the thread holding it in place has bleached to a dark violet, indicative of a season or two's worth of washing. Cotton twill as used required a very dense stitch to hold it in place to prevent fraying. An examination of the stitching on the inside of the jersey shows that it is original. Notably, with the team's 1972 switch to double knit jerseys the old flannel uniforms of 1970-71 were quickly rendered obsolete for re-use.

Restoration Performed: Once stripped, the light table revealed the ghosts of the original name and number on back, Mickey Stanley's #24. The ghosts were compared to my archived font for the team in 1970-1971, and it matched well with only slight (expected) distortion evident from the flannel fabric. I cut and placed the replacement lettering, created from the same vintage cotton based Navy twill, and stitched it with suitably faded thread to match the front emblem. I note that the leading "S" in Stanley's name was originally sewn upside down compared to the template, a typical period stitching error. I replicated this error in my restoration.

At left: The jersey as received. Above the dark ghosts of Fife's removed number and name can still be seen, and the outline of the ghosts of Stanley's original name and number are visible. The jersey fabric has stretched with age, and the NOB font from the original template is overlaid on the ghosts in Navy. Notice the upside down "S". At right, an exemplar Tigers' tail tag showing felt fabric failure somewhat less than than on the jersey in review.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition and has been professionally and accurately restore to its appearance as originally worn. The jersey has no contrivances of of any kind. It has the vestiges of original team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Mickey Stanley of the 1970/1971 Detroit Tigers.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 38

Minnesota Twins

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Twins Uniform History Notes

- When the Washington Senators relocated to Minnesota in 1961, the newly minted Minnesota Twins debuted in classic flannel uniforms. The home set featured cream-colored fabric with navy pinstripes and a slanted “Twins” script in navy with red outline. Road jerseys were plain gray. Both sets used two-color block or Varsity-style numbers depending on manufacturer.
- The only spot of color on the road jersey is the Twins’ keystone shaped patch (which also appeared on the home jersey) featuring their two cartoonish mascots, Minnie and Paul, shaking hands as they reach across the Mississippi River. These uniforms remained unchanged through 1971, the team’s final year of flannels.
- In 1972, the team transitioned to double-knit polyester uniforms. That season, lettering colors were reversed—now red outlined in navy—and tri-color knit trim was added at the collar and sleeve ends. The home jersey, now just white as the pinstripes were removed, retains a button-front design. In 1973, the road jersey switches to a V-neck pullover and joins the powder blue trend with a new look in that color.
- In 1974, the home jersey becomes a V-neck pullover, like the road.
- Names on back introduced in 1977, appearing on both home and road jerseys. From 1981-1996, they were worn only on the road, returning to both sets in 1997. The NOB font from 1977-1986 was a bespoke tall, thin vertical arch, usually directly sewn without nameplates. From 1985-1986, nameplates began to be used more frequently.
- A major redesign arrived in 1987 alongside the team’s move back to button-front jerseys. Home jerseys featured navy pinstripes and a red-outlined “Twins” script; road jerseys carried vertically arched “Minnesota” in block letters across gray pinstripes. Number fonts changed from Varsity to Block with Serifs, and front numbers were introduced. NOBs were removed from home jerseys but continued on the road.
- 1997: Fiddling begins. NOBs returned to all jerseys. That year also saw the debut of two alternate jerseys: 1) a short-lived red home alternate, derided by television announcers as the “Dairy Queen” jersey for its color combination, which was retired after two games; and 2) a navy blue road alternate with white “Minnesota” lettering. The navy alternate remained in the rotation through 2008.
- In 2000, a navy home alternate was introduced. It featured “Twins” script on the chest with mismatched front and back number colors.
- The team added an alternate white pinstriped home vest in 2006, worn with navy undershirts. It was seldom worn and officially vanishes after 2010.
- To commemorate the final season at the Metrodome in 2009, a retro-style alternate was introduced. Though not an exact replica of any single past uniform, it borrowed elements from the 1970s and early ’80s—including script, sleeve patch, and narrow tri-color trim—with modern Block with Serifs numbers. It is only worn in 2009.
- A modernized road jersey debuted in 2010, replacing the gray pinstripes used since 1987. The new version featured a flowing cursive “Minnesota” script with navy and red trim. The home jersey also received a subtle update that year, with slightly rounded corners on the wordmark letters to improve spacing. Names now direct-sewn, phasing out nameplates.
- Additional alternate styles emerged in the 2010s: a cream-colored home alternate based on the original 1961 uniform with keystone patch and no NOBs; a red alternate jersey with the “TC” logo beginning in 2016; and in 2019, a navy home alternate with “Twins” script outlined in gold. A full powder blue alternate was introduced in 2020, designed as a modernized throwback to the 1973-1986 road jerseys, complete with red/navy script and tri-color trim.
- The myriad of changes make the Twins’ uniform identity during the 2010-2022 period very inconsistent across the six jersey options – a mishmash of different logo lettering and scripts, trim placement and colors, and outline and drop shadow styles.
- In 2023, the Twins unveiled a full rebrand with four new uniform styles, all built around a consistent custom font. The new set included a minimalist white home jersey with red “Twins” script and a navy front number; a gray pinstriped road set with block “Minnesota” lettering; a cream “Twin Cities” alternate with crossed-flag patch; and a navy “Minnesota” alternate.
- In 2024, the Twins debut their first City Connect uniform. The aquatic blue pullover was inspired by the state’s lakes and featured a ripple-textured pattern, a wave-formed “MN” chest logo, and a loon patch on the sleeve. Details included a “10,000 Lakes” jock tag, a hidden “home” state mark inside the collar, and bold, perforated block-style numbers.
- Spanning the 1970s flannel-to-poly era to the modern overhaul of the 2020s, the Twins’ uniforms reflected a balance of tradition and innovation. Despite some inconsistency during the alternate-heavy 2000s, the team established a more cohesive identity by 2023—rooted in both state pride and historical legacy.

I am always looking for new information and better photographs. If you can share new information, or offer corrections to this material, please send a note to me, at gamewornguides@gmail.com . Please tell me which page you are referencing. All contributors will be recognized by name in a future edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Year by Year Summary

1970-1971

1972-1973

1972 only

1974-1986

1973-1986

- While most names are in vertical arch font, some uniforms are seen lettered with tall, block-style names instead. These are often mid-season adds or restorations.

 When names on back are used, back numbers are smaller (close to 7 or 7 1/2"). With no NOB, numbers are closer to 8" or almost 8 1/2".

1987-2009

Style Continues onward

Twins Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1970	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Block 2 color	No	-	Team Shield	-	Rawlings/Spalding
1971	Home White Flannel	No	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road Gray Flannel	No	Block 2 color	No	-	Team Shield	-	Rawlings/Spalding
1972	Home	No	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	No	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Disc	-	Spalding
1973	Home	No	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No		Team Shield	-	Wilson
1974	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1975	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1976	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1977	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1978	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1979	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1980	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch*	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1981	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch	Yes	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1982	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1983	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1984	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1985	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	-	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch	No	Team Shield	-	Wilson
1986	Home	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	No	-	Team Shield	25th Anniversary	Wilson
	Road	Front Varsity 2 color	2 color Varsity	Tall Vertical Arch	Yes	Team Shield	25th Anniversary	Wilson
1987	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Rawlings
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
1988	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Rawlings
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
1989	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Rawlings
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
1990	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Rawlings
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Rawlings
1991	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	Twins 30th Anniv	Rawlings
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	Twins 30th Anniv	Rawlings
1992	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
1993	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
1994	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	MLB 125th	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	MLB 125th	Russell
1995	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
1996	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	No	-	Team "TC"	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell

© GameWornGuides.com

1997 only

1987-2009

1987-2009

1997-2008

2000-2009

2006-2010

2009 only

Twins Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1997	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team “TC”	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Home Red Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team “TC”	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	Jackie Robinson	Russell
1998	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team “TC”	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
1999	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team “TC”	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
2000	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team “TC”/ CRG Mem	Twins 40th Anniv	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc/CRG Mem	Twins 40th Anniv	Russell
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team “TC”/ CRG Mem	Twins 40th Anniv	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc/CRG Mem	Twins 40th Anniv	Russell
2001	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team “TC”	AL 100th Anniversary	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	AL 100th Anniversary	Russell
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team “TC”	AL 100th Anniversary	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	AL 100th Anniversary	Russell
2002	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
2003	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Russell
2004	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	“Eloise” Memorial	Russell
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	“Eloise” Memorial	Russell
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	“Eloise” Memorial	Russell
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	“Eloise” Memorial	Russell
2005	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	40th Anniv of 1965 Champs	Majestic
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	40th Anniv of 1965 Champs	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	40th Anniv of 1965 Champs	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	40th Anniv of 1965 Champs	Majestic
2006	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	“34” Puckett Memorial	Majestic
	Alt Home Vest	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	-	“34” Mem (rt chest)	Majestic
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	“34” Puckett Memorial	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	“34” Puckett Memorial	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	“34” Puckett Memorial	Majestic
2007	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	Herb Carneal Memorial	Majestic
	Alt Home Vest	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	-	Smaller Carneal Mem (rt chest)	Majestic
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	Herb Carneal Memorial	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	Herb Carneal Memorial	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	Herb Carneal Memorial	Majestic
2008	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Home Vest	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	-	-	Majestic
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Disc	-	Majestic
2009	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	Metrodome / Carl patches	Majestic
	Alt Home Vest	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	smaller Carl patch on lft chest	-	Majestic
	Road Pinstripe	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	Yes	Team Disc	Metrodome / Carl patches	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	Yes	Team Minnesota Patch	Metrodome / Carl patches	Majestic
	Retro Home Alt (1970s)	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch	Metrodome / Carl patches	Majestic

 Broadcaster Herb Carneal died on April 1, 2007. Team wore black armbands April 2-8, then memorial patch April 9 for the rest of the season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010-2014

2010 – Listed, but was it worn?

2010-2013

Change to Flex Base

2010-2020

2010-2018

2011-2020

2015-2020

Twins Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2010	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Revised Team Minnesota Patch	Target Field Inaugural	Majestic
	Alt Home Vest	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	left chest: Smaller Target Field Inaug	-	Majestic
	Road Gray (new style)	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Disc	50 Seasons	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	Target Field Inaugural	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Revised Team Minnesota Patch	50 Seasons	Majestic
	Retro Home Alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch	50 Seasons	Majestic
2011	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	"3" Killebrew memorial	Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Disc	"3" Killebrew memorial	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	"3" Killebrew memorial	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	"3" Killebrew memorial	Majestic
	Retro Home alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch	"3" Killebrew memorial	Majestic
2012	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Disc	-	Majestic
	Home Blue Alt	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	-	Majestic
	Retro Home Alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch	-	Majestic
2013	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Home Blue Alt "Twins"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Retro Home alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch		Majestic
2014	Home	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	2014 All Star Game	Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Disc	2014 All Star Game	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	2014 All Star Game	Majestic
	Retro Home Alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch	2014 All Star Game	Majestic
2015	Home white (new)	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	1 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Retro Home alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch		Majestic
2016	Home white	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Retro Home alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch		Majestic
	Home Red TC	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
2017	Home white	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Retro Home alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch		Majestic
	Home Red TC	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
2018	Home white	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc		Majestic
	Retro Home alt (1960s)	-	2 color Block w/serifs	-	-	Old style Twins patch		Majestic
	Home Red TC	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch		Majestic
2019	Home white	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Home Blue Twins script	-	3 color Block w/serifs	3 color block	-	TC patch	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Home Red TC	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
2020	Home white	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	60th Anniversary	Nike
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	60th Anniversary	Nike
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	60th Anniversary	Nike
	Home Blue Twins script	-	3 color Block w/serifs	3 color block	-	TC patch	60th Anniversary	Nike
	Alternate Powder Blue Nostalgia	2 color Varsity	2 color Varsity	2 color block	-	Old style Twins patch	60th Anniversary	Nike
	Home Red TC	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	60th Anniversary	Nike

2016-2020

2019-2020

2020

© GameWornGuides.com

These six styles continue from previous years

Switch to Vapor Premiere Elite

Twins Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2021	Home white	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	Mike Bell memorial	Nike
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	Mike Bell memorial	Nike
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	Mike Bell memorial	Nike
	Home Blue Twins script	-	3 color Block w/serifs	3 color block	-	TC patch	Mike Bell memorial	Nike
	Alternate Powder Blue Nostalgia	2 color Varsity	2 color Varsity	2 color block	-	Old style Twins patch	Mike Bell memorial	Nike
	Home Red TC	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	Mike Bell memorial	Nike
2022	Home white	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Nike
	Road Gray	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	-	Nike
	Road Blue Alt "Minnesota"	2 color Front Block w/Serifs	2 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Disc	-	Nike
	Home Blue Twins script	-	3 color Block w/serifs	3 color block	-	TC patch	-	Nike
	Alternate Powder Blue Nostalgia	2 color Varsity	2 color Varsity	2 color block	-	Old style Twins patch	-	Nike
	Home Red TC	-	3 color Block w/serifs	2 color block	No	Team Minnesota Patch	-	Nike
2023	Home white	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Minnesota silhouette	-	Nike
	Road gray pinstripe	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Minnesota silhouette	-	Nike
	Cream Alternate "Twin Cities"	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Crossed flags	-	Nike
	Blue Alt "Minnesota"	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Red/white TC	-	Nike
2024	Home white	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Minnesota silhouette‡	-	Nike
	Road gray pinstripe	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Minnesota silhouette‡	-	Nike
	Cream Alternate "Twin Cities"	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Crossed flags‡	-	Nike
	Blue Alt "Minnesota"	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Red/white TC‡	-	Nike
	City Connect	No	Custom 3 color (perf)	Nike Block 3 color	No	Loon patch‡	-	Nike
2025	Home white	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Minnesota silhouette‡	-	Nike
	Road gray pinstripe	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Minnesota silhouette‡	-	Nike
	Cream Alternate "Twin Cities"	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Crossed flags‡	-	Nike
	Blue Alt "Minnesota"	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	Twins font 1 color	No	Red/white TC‡	-	Nike
	City Connect	No	Custom 3 color (perf)	Nike Block 3 color	No	Loon patch‡	-	Nike

‡ patch sleeve varies based on handedness of player

© GameWornGuides.com

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1970-1971 Home

- The 1961–1971 flannel home uniform is very traditional: navy pinstripes "a la New York Yankees" with bold navy outlined with red Varsity numbers on the back. Varsity is used by Wilson as its standard team font, and it is interesting that the road jerseys of the same vintage use a different number font because they are made by Rawlings and Spalding.
- "Twins" script appears on the front with an underline tail, also rendered in navy with a red outline.
- The classic left sleeve patch is in the shape of a shield and features the team's mascots, "Minnie and Paul" shaking hands across the Mississippi River.

© GameWornGuides.com

1970-1971 Road

- The Twins flannel road uniforms of 1961–1971 mirrored the home pin-striped versions, aside from fabric color.
- The button-front gray flannel design exemplified simplicity. It had no trim or ornamentation, apart from the team patch on the left sleeve.
- The back numbers used Block font, in contrast to the Wilson-made home jerseys, which featured the company's standard Varsity font. For example, notice the lack of "feet" (or serifs) on the numeral "1" (top center).

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1973 Home

1972

1972 marked the debut of the Twins' first knit jersey. It is a button-front white double knit with wide knit sleeve trim. The lettering colors were reversed from 1971—now red with a navy outline. There are no numbers on the front and no player names on back.

1972

Old photos show that these jerseys lived on to be used and abused in Spring Training at least a couple more years. Examples that survive today typically exhibit heavy wear.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 Road

The Twins' double-knit era has begun! This one-year-only style is a button-front design in medium/dark gray, with wide red/white/blue knit sleeve-end trim.

Road jerseys are made by Spalding—note the wide sleeve-end trim (different from the Wilson home jerseys) and flat-hemmed shirt tail, characteristic of Spalding. There are no numbers on the front, no names on back. Back numbers used a two-color Varsity style—red outlined in navy—matching the home jersey for the first time. The sleeve featured what might be baseball's ugliest patch ever (apologies for the editorial). Old photos show that these jerseys lived on in Spring Training for several more years.

© GameWornGuides.com

1974-1986 Home

1974

For 1974, the 1972–1973 button-down home jersey is transferred to a pullover format, now with a front number added. Numbers are two-color, red/navy blue in Varsity style.

No names on back 1974–1976. Names on back added 1977–1980. Extra-tall vertical arch font (4 ¼") for the one-color, red names, with no nameplate used. No name on back again from 1981–1986.

Notice that the height of the numbers changes with the addition of player names. With names they are 7½" tall, without names they are slightly more than 8" tall.

1976

© GameWornGuides.com

1974-1986 Home, continued

1980

Bill Henderson Collection

1986

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1986 Road

1973

Bill Henderson Collection

1983

Steve Kraljic Collection

1986

For 1973, the road jersey changes to a powder blue pullover. Numbers are two-color, red/navy blue in Varsity style. Numbers on back and on front left. Back numbers 7 ½" tall, front numbers 4 ¼" tall. Without NOB, back numbers are 8–8 ½" tall.

No name on back 1973–1976. Player names first appear in 1977. Names on back are in an extra tall, thin vertical arch font (4¼") in single-color red. Some, like in the example shown (top right), featured names in a non-vertical arch font—likely mid-season acquisitions or incorrect restorations. Nameplates were not used until approximately 1985, and were definitively added by 1986.

All Twins jerseys from 1972–1986 were heavily recycled in the minor leagues. The Twins typically covered the name with a blank nameplate rather than removing it. Game-worn examples often reveal this practice by showing less sun-fading beneath the blank nameplate.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1986 Twins Team Tagging

Note that a couple of these set tags confirm the existence of an annual 'Set 3' for Twins uniforms—an uncommon practice, particularly for a low-budget team like the Twins. Most teams typically issued only two uniform sets per season. Wilson jerseys used exclusively 1973–1986.

The two larger photographs illustrate differences in year tagging between a pair of 1974 home jerseys. Right: This one without the set number or name in collar may have been a spare from the start of the season, issued to the player after the season began. This is highly likely, given that Randy Hundley played only 32 games for the Twins in 1974 coming off of injuries with the Cubs the prior year (see his 1974 Topps Traded card here, with bad cap airbrushing).

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2009 Home

1987

Button-front returns after a 13-year absence, now featuring navy pin-stripes, and an updated Twins script wordmark.

Two-color numbers on back and on left front, red/navy blue. Numbers are now Block with Serifs, replacing the Varsity style previously used. Front numbers are “Front Block w/Serifs Variant”. No names on back 1987-1996. Names added in 1997–2009, one-color navy blue. Nameplates used, even though they look odd on pinstriped jerseys.

Twins team “TC” patch on sleeve 1987–2001, then Minnesota-shaped team patch used 2002–2009.

1987–2001

2002–2009

1992

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2009 Home, continued

Bill Henderson Collection

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2009 Home, continued

Kent Hrbek (L) and Tom Brunansky model the Twins' new uniforms.

Left: From the Twins' 1987 yearbook: two star players model the new uniforms, illustrating how styles have changed since then. Uniforms today have evolved from super-tight cuts to looser, baggier silhouettes.

Below: impressive retrospective display of Twins uniforms since the beginning at "Twins Fest 2007."

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2009 Road

1987

- Road jersey returns to a button-front design, now gray with navy pinstripes. 'Minnesota' vertically arched across the chest in block letters
- Two-color numbers on back and left front, red/navy/blue. Numbers are now "Block with Serifs" a change from the Varsity numbers used through 1986. Front numbers are Front Block w/Serifs Variant.
- One-color navy blue NOBs used consistently throughout this era, on nameplates.
- Twins team disc patch on sleeve in all years.

1993

1991 game worn example with World Series patch

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2009 Road, continued

1998

2000

2006

2008

© GameWornGuides.com

1997 Alternate Home

An eagle eye might notice errors on the Klingenbeck (left) and Durant jersey (bottom right): the "S" in Twins is sewn upside down compared to the correct Meares example (top right).

This jersey was derisively nicknamed the 'Dairy Queen' jersey by ESPN announcers due to its resemblance to the red-and-white advertising signs behind home plate. It was worn only twice—on April 6 and 27—before being retired. Two-color name and numbers, white/navy. Name on a plate. Because it was used in 1997 only, this jersey should always have the Jackie Robinson "Breaking Barriers" patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

1997-2008 Alternate Road

1997

- Navy blue jersey with two-color "Minnesota" vertically arched on front.
- The two-color front numbers were red over white—reversed from the later home blue alternate. The back numbers used the same red/white combination..
- Name on back is two-color, white/red. Nameplate is used.
- Twins disc logo patch used on left sleeve.
- This style was the Twins' first Cool Base style jersey introduced in 2006. It is retired after the 2008 season.

2000

© GameWornGuides.com

1997-2008 Alternate Road, continued

2004

2006

2006

2008

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2005 Alternate Home/2006-2009 Alternate Home Blue

Left: 'TC' sleeve patch (2000–2001)

Right: Minnesota state sleeve patch (2002–2009)

- Navy blue jersey featuring the 'Twins' script with an underline tail across the front.
- Note that two-color number on front (white/red) is different from the back (red/white), and different from the 1997–2008 alternate road jersey.
- Two-color number on back—red/white, two-color name—white/red. Nameplates used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006-2009 Alternate Home Vest

The white pinstripe alternate vest is introduced in 2006 and worn at home. It is lettered identically to the home jersey. Plain white nameplates are used with one-color, navy blue Block-style names. Numbers are two-color Block with Serifs.

Players wear a plain navy blue undershirt with the sleeveless vest. No team patches are sewn onto the undershirt.

Each year of this style has a different chest patch treatment. The 2006 “34” Kirby Puckett memorial patch is worn on the upper right chest that year. The 2007 ‘Herb’ patch is also worn on the upper right chest, though the vest patch version is slightly smaller than the version used on other jerseys. There is no patch in 2008. In 2009, the “Carl” patch is used, but on the upper left chest, opposite the 2006 and 2007 patch placement

The vest was worn four times in 2006—all of them losses—and was branded ‘unlucky’ by the team. It was then worn only once in 2007 in the first game of a double header on August 31. In 2008, when Livan Hernandez joined the team, he preferred it and the team wore it several times when he pitched. Under Hernandez’s influence, Francisco Liriano also chose the vest for the team to wear during several of his starts. It was worn for a handful of games in the first half of the 2009 season, and seems to have disappeared after.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006-2009 Alternate Home Vest, continued

2008

2008

2009

2009

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Alternate Home Retro

4ALS awareness chest patch worn league-wide on July 4, 2009

The 2009 Alternate #3 (as it is called by the Twins) is meant to recall 1982, the team's first year in the Metrodome, which closed after the 2009 season.

It is not an exact copy of any prior year's jersey. It features a button-front design similar to the 1972–1973 home model, with the 1972–1986 style script and sleeve patch, but it incorporates the Block with Serifs player numbers used from 1987–2009. The sleeve end and collar trim are narrower than that used 1972–1986

These retro-style alternate 'mashup' jerseys did not include names on the back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010-2014 Home

For 2010, the Twins tweaked their home wordmark so subtly that it likely would have gone unnoticed without announcement.. The old and new logo are shown side by side below. Corners are rounded off, and this allows the letters to be spaced more closely.

Player names are now direct sewn, eliminating the nameplates. Pinstripes and nameplates are a bad combination making this a long-overdue and welcome aesthetic improvement. Yellow-bordered state of Minnesota patch continues on the left sleeve.

1987–2009

2010–2014

© GameWornGuides.com

2010-2022 Road

2016: Player name on back adds a red outline.

After a 23-year run, the gray pinstriped 'Minnesota' road jersey was retired for the 2010 season. It was replaced with a solid gray road jersey featuring a more flowing, cursive 'Minnesota' script—similar to the retro-style script used on the team's alternate uniform. All lettering is navy and red in combination, except the direct-sewn NOB which is solid navy. A new team sleeve patch disc is introduced for road uniforms, worn on the left sleeve. It is the team's new primary logo. Navy/red/navy knit trim on the very ends of the sleeves and around the neck.

For 2016: The team adds a red outline to the player name on back.

Photos: Jeff Barak/Minnesota Twins

© GameWornGuides.com

2010-2022 Road, continued

2016

2020

Note the style code change from TWR2 on the Majestic jersey to MT22 on the Nike version of the same jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010-2018 Alternate Home 1960s Style

2011

2010

Jeff Barak/Minnesota Twins photo

- To mark the first year in their new stadium, Target Field, the Twins roll out a throwback button-front alternate based on their 1961 uniform, to be worn on opening day and then for every Saturday home game.
- It is made of a convincing cream-colored, full weight knit pinstriped fabric designed to mimic the old flannels. It is, in every way, a Turn Back the Clock replica of the original 1960s Minnesota Twins home uniform, down to the keystone-shaped sleeve patch featuring Minnie and Paul shaking hands across the Mississippi River. By 2014, the jerseys transitioned to Cool Base, followed by Flex Base in 2016.
- All lettering in navy over red, Block with Serifs numbers on back, no player NOB used. No one asked for my rating, but I give this one an A+.
- May 16, 2011: When former slugger and Twins hero Harmon Killebrew entered hospice care and was near death, the Twins announced that they would wear this uniform for all remaining 2011 home games in his honor. Note that this meant that neither the standard home whites nor the home blue alternates would be worn on-field with the #3 Killebrew patch, though it was still added to those sets as a precaution.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010-2018 Alternate Home 1960s Style, continued

2013

2016

© GameWornGuides.com

2010-2013 Alternate Home Blue

2010

The subtle revision to the front wordmark was carried over to the home alternate jersey as well. No nameplates were used. All other elements remained unchanged from 2009. Front numbers and player name on back remain white outlined with red; back numbers are red outlined with white. This jersey style is retired after the 2013 season.

Example of representative tagging (not from the jersey pictured)

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013, 2016-2022 Alternate Road/2014-2015 Alternate Blue

Bill Henderson Collection

The 2011 alternate road jersey combined the new-for-2010 road wordmark style (rendered here in red and white) with the blue body of the home alternate jersey, including its narrow red knit trim on the sleeve ends and placket. It also featured the road jersey's Twins disc patch on the left sleeve.

Just like the home alternate jersey, front numbers are Front Block with Serifs white over red, back numbers are Block with Serifs red over white, names are direct sewn white over red.

After the retirement of the alternate home blue jersey following 2013, this jersey served as both a home and road alternate during the 2014–2015 seasons. In 2016, it reverted to exclusive road alternate use with the debut of a new red home alternate.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013, 2016-2022 Alternate Road/2014-2015 Alternate Blue, continued

2018

2022

Note the style code change from TWAB on the Majestic jersey to MT3B on the Nike version of the same jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015-2022 Home

Just weeks after the end of the 2014 season, the Twins showcased a new primary home uniform for 2015. The Twins' prior home pinstriped jersey was one of the longest-running designs in MLB, having been introduced in 1987 and lasting 28 seasons with minimal changes.

The new jersey retained the same basic wordmark as the old, but with red and navy reversed, making navy the primary color as it had been prior to 1972. A gold drop shadow is added to the front wordmark and Varsity back numbers; Block player NOB is two-color navy/red without the shadow. There is no number on the front of the new design.

The state of Minnesota patch continues on the left sleeve, and navy/gold/red knit trim adorns the very edges of the collar and sleeves.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015-2022 Home, continued

2017

2020

Note the style code change from TWHH on the Majestic jersey to MT1H on the Nike version of the same jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2022 Alternate Home Red

Almost two decades after the "Dairy Queen" red jerseys that were retired after only two games, the Twins introduce a new red alternate into their rotation. The Majestic Flex Base jersey has the team's "TC" logo on front, with a white "T" and blue "C," all outlined in gold. Player names in blue/white Block. Block with Serifs numbers in blue/white/gold drop shadow. The team's Minnesota-shaped patch resides on the left sleeve, while blue/gold/red braid encircles the neck and sleeve openings. The 2019 style has the MLB150 patch on the right sleeve, while the 2020 version had the team's 60th anniversary patch there. Majestic made these jerseys through 2019 with MTAA as the inventory tag code, Nike took over in 2020 and used MT3A as the code.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2010 Twins Team Tagging

During this period, the Twins used three uniform manufacturers. Through 1999, team tags were placed inside the collar. Beginning 2000, they were typically sewn outside of the shirt tail.

© GameWornGuides.com

© GameWornGuides.com

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of prior years.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019-2022 Alternate Home Blue

The Twins replace their retro-inspired home alternates with this navy jersey that prominently features gold for 2019. This entry has the team's retro script on front, and Block back names and Block with Serifs back numbers in red/blue/gold. Unlike the home and red alternate jerseys—where gold appears as a drop shadow—on this jersey gold is used as a standard outline. Blue/gold/red trim encircles the neck and sleeve openings. The team's "TC" patch is on the left sleeve, also now outlined in gold, while for 2019, the MLB150 patch is on the right.

Top left: Example shown includes the Joe Mauer retirement patch, which was worn only on June 15, 2019.

The 2019 version was made by Majestic, Nike took over as manufacturer from 2020–2022.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2022 Alternate Home Powder Blue

Like many teams that wore powder blue road jerseys in the past—the Twins last did so in 1986—they reintroduced the color in 2020 as a new alternate home jersey. This version leans toward a lightly updated throwback rather than a completely new design, as seen with some other teams. Very similar to their 1973–1986 road jersey but now a button-front, not a pullover, this jersey, made by Nike in their version of Majestic's Flex Base, features red/navy throwback team script and front and back numbers, which replicate the Giants' bold, wide Varsity used from 2000–2012. Player names appear on back in red. A team shield patch, like the one used up until 1986, adorns the left sleeve. Red/white/blue knit trim is sewn into the sleeve ends, while braid in the same colors surrounds the neck opening. The 2020 version has the team's 60 Seasons patch on the right sleeve. The 2021 issue has the "MB" memorial on the right sleeve. This jersey was worn once for a road game, April 16, 2021.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Home

After many years of wearing a mismatched collection of uniform designs, the Twins began fresh in 2023 with a clean slate. Made by Nike, the home jersey borders on minimalist: a white design featuring the familiar “Twins” script—with a separate underline beneath “WIN”—in red, above a custom-font blue front number. The number font repeats on back in red, under a blue player name in the same type style. Sleeve ends are adorned with wide red/white/blue trim, and the left sleeve sports a navy blue patch in the shape of Minnesota with a red star where the Twin Cities are located.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Road

The Twins' 2023 road set, made by Nike, is a gray base jersey with darker gray pinstripes. "Minnesota" is arched across the front blue in the team's new custom block font, just above a red player number on front left in the same font. The number font repeats on back in red, under a blue player name in the same type style. Like the home jersey, the sleeve ends are adorned with wide red/white/blue trim, and the left sleeve sports a navy blue patch in the shape of Minnesota with a red star where the Twin Cities are located.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Alternate Home

If the Twins' new 2023 set is simple, then the home alternate is the plainest of the bunch. This cream-colored Nike jersey features "Twin Cities" spelled out in blue script across the front, evoking more of a City Connect feel than a traditional alternate. A detached, blue underline resides under the script, as does a blue player number in the new custom font. On the back, the player name and number—both in the custom font—are rendered in single-color blue. Both sleeves are encircled with a wide white/blue braid (with the white nearly invisible against the cream fabric), while the left sleeve bears a blue and white patch featuring two crossed flags—one with an "M" and the other with "STP," representing Minneapolis and St. Paul.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Alternate Navy

The Twins' 2023 navy alternate jersey, made by Nike, is designed for use both at home and on the road. The base jersey is a dark blue, with "Minnesota" arched across the front in white in the team's new custom block font, just above a red player number on front left in the same font. The number font repeats on back in white, under a red player name in the same type style. Like the home jersey, sleeve ends are adorned with wide red/white/blue trim. The left sleeve of this jersey sports a new take on the team's classic "TC" ligature.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020–2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Twins' year-old home jersey. For most teams, the most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Twins already had small player name lettering on this style, so the change is more evident in the new arch than the size. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the "Twins" script now breaks in a slightly different place, though it looks like the "W" is wider than before to accommodate the change. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the sleeves rather than sewn on to them. This often makes trim appear wider, but this style had fairly wide trim before, so it appears about the same. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. Given the relatively minor changes, it is possible the team had the new template in mind when designing the 2023 revision to its jerseys, perhaps with the expectation that VPE would be in use by then. If so, it is likely that a VPE design was actually imposed on a Flex Base template for 2023, rather than the other way around.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Road

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Twins year-old road jersey. For most teams, the most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Twins already had small player name lettering on this style, so the change is more evident in the new arch than the size. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the "Minnesota" lettering splits in the same place. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the sleeves rather than sewn on to them. This often makes trim appear wider, but this style had fairly wide trim before, so it appears about the same. It is unclear if the team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024, more research is required. Given the relatively minor changes, it is possible the team had the new template in mind when designing the 2023 revision to its jerseys, perhaps with the expectation that VPE would be in use by then. If so, it is likely that a VPE design was actually imposed on a Flex Base template for 2023, rather than the other way around.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Twins year-old home alternate jersey. For most teams, the most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Twins already had small player name lettering on this style, so the change is more evident in the new arch than the size. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the "Twin Cities" script splits in the same place. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the sleeves rather than sewn on to them. This often makes trim appear wider, but this style had fairly wide trim before, so it appears about the same. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. Given the relatively minor changes, it is possible the team had the new template in mind when designing the 2023 revision to its jerseys, perhaps with the expectation that VPE would be in use by then. If so, it is likely that a VPE design was actually imposed on a Flex Base template for 2023, rather than the other way around.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Navy

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Twins year-old navy alternate jersey. For most teams, the most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Twins already had small player name lettering on this style, so the change is more evident in the new arch than the size. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the "Minnesota" lettering splits in the same place. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the sleeves rather than sewn on to them. This often makes trim appear wider, but this style had fairly wide trim before, so it appears about the same. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. Given the relatively minor changes, it is possible the team had the new template in mind when designing the 2023 revision to its jerseys, perhaps with the expectation that VPE would be in use by then. If so, it is likely that a VPE design was actually imposed on a Flex Base template for 2023, rather than the other way around.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024-2025 City Connect

Minnesota is the land of 10,000 lakes, and the Twins lean into this with their City Connect uniforms, launched in 2024. Other design elements, according to MLB's press release, include:

- The Ripple Pattern: With a fluid pattern that shines and shimmers like reflections off the water, the jersey ripples with every move.
- MN Logo: The curves of each letter flow together like waves, uniting the "MN" just as our lakes and rivers link communities across our state. At the top is a beacon for Minnesota and the Twins: The North Star.
- Sleeve Patch: Upon the sunset waters of our 10,000 lakes flies Minnesota's state bird – the loon. The body, a single raindrop – when it touches down, a ripple. The eyes, the stitches of a baseball. The beak, the North Star.
- Jock Tag: "10,000 Lakes" in the Twins' custom Nike City Connect font mimics the movement of waves.
- Heat-pressed collar mark: The state mark sits upon the inside neckline, a symbol of the Twins' everlasting connection to our home.

This style premiered on Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, and features its hallmarks including sewn-in neck and collar trim, a narrow placket, and perforated numbers. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite the updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. The Twins player name lettering appears as if it may be larger than it was in 2023, and certainly bigger than 2024. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025, though the Twins kept theirs all along. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. Note that this jersey also uses Nike's new-for-2025 white jock tag. A handful of jerseys across the league use this new tag.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of time (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. The Twins road jerseys never had this neck trim to begin with in 2024, as pinstriped jerseys lacked this feature unless the trim was used in a contrasting color. The Twins player name lettering appears as if it may be larger than it was in 2023, and certainly bigger than 2024. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025, though the Twins kept theirs all along. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. The Twins player name lettering appears as if it may be larger than it was in 2023, and certainly bigger than 2024. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025, though the Twins kept theirs all along. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Navy

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. The Twins player name lettering appears as if it may be larger than it was in 2023, and certainly bigger than 2024. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025, though the Twins kept theirs all along. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1981-1984 Batting Practice

It looks like the wearer hacked the sleeves off of this example for comfort.

- The Twins' first batting practice jersey is a V-neck made of thin, solid (non-mesh) navy blue fabric. There is no trim on the sleeves or neck, and it has an elastic waist band.
- The Twins lettering has a wide tail, and all lettering and numbers are heat-pressed on (not sewn). This jersey is made by Sand-Knit, and not surprisingly uses Sand-Knit-style Varsity numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

Early 1980s Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

Made by Majestic. We'll call this a jersey rather than a jacket, as these early Twins warm-up jerseys were made of solid fabric, like those shown on the prior page. The presence of a player number on the back is the main criterion we use to classify it as a "jersey." It features sewn-on twill team script on the front. Yes, the "tail" under the word "Twins" is a little long, but this was the early 80s, and details like that seemed to matter little, especially on warm-up equipment. One example here even includes a sleeve number. It is very difficult to determine whether these jerseys are original or modified.

© GameWornGuides.com

1985-1986 Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

This style used navy blue mesh, thin red/white knit trim at neck and on the sleeve ends, narrow tail under the wordmark, with all sewn-on lettering.

The photo on the left is from a 1985 card, and the style of the jersey is the same as the Majestic example above with sewn-on lettering.

Majestic Varsity numbers on back only, two-color white/red.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2002 Batting Practice (Two-Color Wordmark)

Identify by two-color Twins lettering, red/white. Two-color numbers on the back only, red/white. No names used. “TC” logo added to sleeve in later years. 1987–1991 made by Rawlings, 1992–2002 made by Russell and Majestic.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-2002 Batting Practice (Three-Color Wordmark)

- This style has three-color “Twins” wordmark red/blue/white.
- Two- and sometimes three-color numbers are used on the back only. Numbers are Block with Serifs similar to the game jersey, in either red/blue/white or simply in red/white.
- No player NOB used.
- Note the team “TC” patch on the 2001 example (left).
- This variation seems to be less common than the version shown on the previous page. They may have been used in different years, but we have examples of both styles with common year tagging, suggesting they were used concurrently.

Top row: The 2001 example has three-color front lettering but two-color numbers on the back. Bottom row: The 1994 example has three-color back numbers that match the three-color script on the front.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2005 Batting Practice

- Softer, non-mesh “tech” fabric.
- Button-front design, two-color Twins script on front. There is a very thin blue outline sandwiched between the red and white.
- No names on back.
- Red and white TC logo on the left sleeve.
- These jerseys are seen in two configurations: Left: two-color numbers; Above: three-color numbers. I have been told that the three-color numbered jerseys are from the second half of 2005 only, but I have not been able to confirm that definitively.
- The Twins wore these in a game on July 6, 2005 vs. Anaheim, likely because of the very hot weather. The Twins would not wear a batting practice jersey in a regular season game again until 2014.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Batting Practice

- For 2006, the Twins put the “TC” cap logo on the front of batting practice jerseys, replacing the basic Twins script design that had been used without much alteration for the past 35 years. This is a one-year style.
- The “TC” patch was simultaneously removed from the sleeve.
- The 2006 jersey is made by Majestic and is a soft performance fabric said to wick moisture away from players’ skin. This fabric pulls easily and fades quickly as well. Red piping is part of the shoulder top seams. Numbers on back in two-color Block with Serifs, red/white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 Batting Practice

Cool Base fabric is used to construct this batting practice jersey. It is very lightweight and sheer.

All logos and numbers are heat-pressed onto the jersey, and are no longer the sewn, layered tackle twill that had been used in the past.

Numbers are Block with Serifs, two-color red/white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

The 2011, the Twins Cool Base batting practice jersey changes to a button-front style from the previous pullover design. Twill lettering returns.

The same “TC” logo appears on the front left chest.

Block with serifs two-color (red/white) numbers on back only.

Solid red side panels replaced the navy/red panels used in the previous style.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Home Batting Practice

All MLB teams had their batting practice jerseys redesigned by Majestic for the 2014 season as part of what was intended to be an ongoing three-year cycle. The Twins' new BP jersey returns to the team script on the front, in white outlined with red. A strip of red trim is used on sleeve ends and around the collar, and the jersey is solid navy, eliminating the contrasting red side panels that had been used going back to 2007.

Block with Serifs numbers in the same colors are sewn on both back and left front; the first time front numbers are used on Twins BP jerseys. No player NOB is used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Road Batting Practice

For the first time, the Twins introduce a road batting practice jersey to their uniform collection. Red-bodied jerseys feature contrasting navy underarm panels, and the team “Minnesota” script with underline on the front in navy outlined with white. A strip of navy trim is used around the collar and on the sleeve ends. Block with Serif numbers are used front and back in the same colors as the front script, and no player NOB is used.

These were worn a few times as regular season game jerseys as well, including August 1, 2014 and August 7–8, 2015 (all road games).

Bill Henderson Collection

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training Home

Rick Ogata Collection

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the pre-season. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, forming the main twill layer used by every team. The Twins use their new red alternate from the regular season as a basis for their Spring Training home jersey. The back numbers are blue patterned twill/white/gold drop shadow. The name on back is blue patterned twill/white. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "FL" representing where the Twins spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Spring Training Road

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, forming the main twill layer for every team. The Twins use their regular season blue alternate road jersey as the basis for their Spring Training road version. The back numbers are red patterned twill/white. The name on back is white patterned twill/red. The jersey also features a rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve styled like an Interstate highway sign and reading "2016" and "FL" to represent the Twins' Spring Training location.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training Home

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with minor design updates. As in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game template and uses special printed twill, now decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. Unlike the prior year’s team-specific versions, all clubs now use a standard twill: white with gray printing.

The Twins again wear red jerseys for home games. Names and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey also features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve, styled like an Interstate highway sign and reading “2017” and “FL” to represent the Twins’ Spring Training location.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training Road

The Twins are one of the few teams with both home and road Spring Training jerseys. In 2016, they adopt blue jerseys for road games. Name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey includes a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve, styled like an Interstate highway sign and reading “2017” and “FL” to represent the Twins’ Spring Training location.

As in 2016, the jersey uses the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, now decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. Starting this year, all MLB teams adopt the same twill — white with gray printing — replacing the prior year’s team-specific versions.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail.

The Twins jersey is blue with blue back with red underarm gussets. The interlocking "TC" logo from their caps appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in white/red Block with serifs on left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training Home

MLB's 2018 Spring Training jerseys follow the same general design template as the previous year, again using each team's standard fonts for player names and numbers, rendered in a single layer of twill printed with 2018-specific Spring Training patterns.

The Twins use their regular-season red alternate jersey as the base. Name and back numbers are sewn in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch—shaped like home plate—is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" to represent the team's Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training Road

The Twins' 2018 road BP jerseys match the home version in design, featuring standard team fonts for player names and numbers rendered in one layer of twill printed with 2018-specific Spring Training patterns.

The team uses its regular-season blue alternate road jersey as the base. Name and back numbers are sewn in white patterned twill, with front numbers in two-color white/red. A new CFX patch—shaped like home plate—is stitched to the right sleeve, displaying "2018" and "FL" to indicate the Twins' Spring Training location.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training Home

The 2019 Spring Training jersey introduces another variation on the themes of the previous three years. This version abandons the single-color printed twill on the back and returns to the regular-season multi-layered team-color twill seen in 2016—though without the sublimated patterns from that year.

The Twins use their regular-season red alternate as the base for this design. A new CFX patch appears on the right sleeve, featuring “2019” and “FLA,” to represent the team’s Spring Training location. Back numbers are blue/white/gold drop shadow. The name on back is blue/white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training Road

The Twins continue their approach of issuing separate Spring Training jerseys for home and road use. The 2019 road jersey drops the single-color printed twill treatment in favor of multi-layered, regular-season-style team-color twill—similar to 2016 but without sublimated patterns.

The base design uses the Twins' regular-season blue alternate road jersey with "Minnesota" across the front. A new CFX patch is stitched to the right sleeve, displaying "2019" and "FLA" to represent their Spring Training location. The name on back and front numbers are white/red, while the back numbers are red/white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2022 Spring Training

MLB simplifies Spring Training uniforms for the 2020 season league-wide. For the first time since 2016, teams eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of their Spring Training home. Lettering now uses the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill found on regular-season uniforms, making many Spring Training jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020–2022, the Twins use their regular-season blue alternate road jersey as a base, with red/white back numbers. The name on back and front numbers are white/red.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Spring Training White

With the introduction of their new uniform set for 2023, the Twins use two of their regular-season uniforms in Spring Training, including their white home jerseys. Made by Nike, the white home jersey has the “Twins” script (with the separate underline under “WIN”) in red above a custom-font blue front number. The number font repeats on back in red, below a blue player name in the same font style. Sleeve ends are adorned with wide red/white/blue trim, and the left sleeve sports a navy blue patch in the shape of Minnesota with a red star where the Twin Cities are located.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Spring Training Blue

With the introduction of their new uniform set for 2023, the Twins use two of their regular-season uniforms in Spring Training, including their blue alternate jerseys. Made by Nike, the jersey features “Minnesota” arched across the chest in white, using the team’s new custom block font, positioned above a red player number on the lower left in the same font. The number font repeats on back in white, below a red player name in the same type style. Like the home jersey, sleeve ends are adorned with wide red/white/blue trim. The left sleeve of this jersey sports a new take on the team’s classic “TC” ligature,

© GameWornGuides.com

Special Events Jerseys

1987-1991 St. Patrick's Day

The Twins occasionally celebrate St. Patrick's Day with green jerseys.

Their early St. Patrick's Day jerseys are made by a St. Paul-based company called Steichen's, which also handled the Twins' game uniform lettering for many years before Majestic took over the job. The logo on the sleeve of the 1991 jersey belongs to Steichen's; the shirt brand is also theirs (though I have photos of another jersey claimed to be from 1991 without a sleeve logo).

These screen-printed mesh jerseys do not look terribly professional, with lettering not even close to official team specifications.

All of the jerseys shown are made of mesh fabric, likely from different years. All lettering is screen-printed..

© GameWornGuides.com

1994 Turn Back the Clock to 1965

Steve Kraljic Collection

The Twins wear 1965-style throwback road uniforms made of real flannel, produced by Mitchell & Ness. The game is on May 8, 1994 vs. the Texas Rangers. The jersey is made of flannel; the "Twins" wordmark on the front and the numbers on the back are applied in tackle twill. The Rangers wear a "fauxback"-style" jersey—red pinstripe with a red and navy "Rangers" script on the front—that mimics a 1963 Washington Senators home uniform, although the actual team never wore this design. Every one of these in our photo archives is autographed on the front, leading us to believe that this set was auctioned off after the game

© GameWornGuides.com

Mid-1990s St. Patrick's Day

The Russell tag style on the front of this jersey along with the lack of a MLB Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the neck places it between 1995 and 1999. The Twins may have participated in St. Patrick's Day dress-up during multiple Spring Training seasons, though photos and records are scarce. The team wore these Russell mesh fabric green jerseys with two-color lettering, no names on the back, and no sleeve patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

1997 Negro Leagues Tribute (1909 St. Paul Gophers)

Steve Kraljic Collection

On July 13, 1997, the Twins wear uniforms honoring the St. Paul "Colored Gophers" of the Negro Leagues for the first time. These uniforms were produced by Ebbets Field Flannels. The Twins played Cleveland, who also wore throwback uniforms. The jerseys are full button-front double knit with white felt lettering. Identify the 1997 version by the Varsity Bold numbers on back, the white Ebbets Field Flannel tag, and the Jackie Robinson patch on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock

July 24, 1999: The Twins participate in the "Turn Ahead the Clock" promotion, wearing the jersey for only one game. The front design is sublimated into the fabric rather than sewn or heat-applied.

Names and numbers on the back use two-color twill: metallic silver over white, in a decidedly non-futuristic 1970s IBM Magnetic Ink Character Recognition (MICR) font—the same style used for the numbers at the bottom of bank checks, originally developed in the mid-1950s!

Right: The 60th Anniversary patch (top), originally designed for the sleeve of a red undershirt, is a clever futuristic touch—but the team actually uses the standard team patch (bottom) during the game, sewn onto a red, 3-button Henley undershirt. Team patch in the game sewn on a red, 3-button Henley undershirt.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

June 10, 2000: The Twins took on the Brewers and recreated 1969. The Twins wear beautifully crafted cream pinstriped home uniforms made of wool flannel by Mitchell & Ness. The opposing Brewers wear the Spring Training uniforms of the one-year-only Seattle Pilots, who moved to Milwaukee for 1970 to become the present-day Brewers.

From a Seattle Pilots fan blog comes this headline:

"The Pilots have finally broken their 30-plus year losing streak! On June 10, 2000, the Brewers wore the Pilots' Spring Training uniforms for Turn Back the Clock Night against the Twins in the Metrodome. Not even the mojo supplied by promotional Harmon Killebrew bobbing head dolls could hold back the Pilots, who took a 5-3 win behind the pitching of Jimmy Haynes."

Right: Decades later, only grainy screen caps from a low-res video remain to showcase this throwback. If you have any photos, please get in touch!

© GameWornGuides.com

2000 Turn Back the Clock to the 1970s

The Twins' Matt Lawton blasts a 2-run double off Blue Jays pitcher Kelvim Escobar in the fifth inning Friday night at the Metrodome. Associated Press Photo

Rawlings made the uniforms for this game between the Twins and the Blue Jays, played on August 11, 2000 in Minnesota. Toronto wore their powder blue road uniforms from 1977.

These reproductions are fairly accurate, but the number font on the back is incorrect. It should be Varsity, but instead uses Block with Serifs—the same font the Twins were using in 2000 on their current uniforms.

The names on back should appear in one-color red vertical arching, rather than the two-color block font used here. The Twins used player NOB during the 1970s on home jerseys in 1977–1980.

Perhaps 2000 marks the beginning of the trend toward looser fits, as these uniforms are much baggier than the tapered-waist, tight-fitting jerseys of the 1970s they aim to recreate.

© GameWornGuides.com

2001 Turn Back the Clock to 1901

Left: The managers exchange lineups at home plate and look as if it's 100 years ago, ummm–except for the shoes.

Right: The cut-off sleeves on this jersey suggest that outfielder Matt Lawton couldn't tolerate wearing it—and chose scissors over historical accuracy.

5-26-01

- The Twins were the "original" Washington Senators/Nationals, who picked up and moved to Minneapolis and became the Twins for the 1961 season. Therefore, it is legitimate for the 2001 Twins to appear as the 1901 Senators in a TBTC contest, where they played the 1901 Athletics, who also wore flannel.
- Game played on May 26, 2001. The flannels, made by Mitchell & Ness, feature all felt lettering.
- Note the McAuliffe-style numbers on the back—although, in reality, players do not wear numbers in 1901.

© GameWornGuides.com

2004 Turn Back the Clock to 1979

Above: J.C. Romero's jersey shows how he hacked off the excessively long shirttail to make his wearable.

The Twins played the Orioles in Baltimore on July 24–25, 2004, in a "Turn Back the Clock" series recreating 1979—the year the Orioles win the American League pennant.

I don't know what patterns were used to create these uniforms, but they are incredibly oversized with sleeves that are at least two inches too long. Looks like the baseball card photographers were at the game, because there are many Twins cards that feature photos from this game, and the uniforms appear awkward and oversized. The sleeve-end trim exaggerates the effect, appearing far wider than on the 1979 originals.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005, 2008 St. Patrick's Day

The Twins wear green for St. Patrick's Day in 2005 and 2008, according to available references. These mesh, button-front green jerseys feature two-color lettering, no names on the back, and no sleeve patches. Made by Majestic, the jersey includes the Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the neck.

Note: The Twins release a large lot of these jerseys to the hobby in 2019, with authentication dates from that year. However, evidence suggests the jerseys originate from the 2005–2008 era..

© GameWornGuides.com

2005 Negro Leagues Tribute (1909 St. Paul Gophers)

- The Twins again dress as the 1909 St. Paul Gophers of the Negro Leagues on July 10, 2005, facing the Royals, who wear 1948 Kansas City Monarchs throwbacks.
- The 2005 jersey is made by AIS and features only four front buttons rather than a full button front, unlike the 1997 Ebbets Field Flannels version. These jerseys include collars, unlike the collarless 1997 versions. The front wordmark is sewn felt.
- Each example observed appears autographed in white on the back, likely as part of a team auction.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010 Negro Leagues Tribute (1909 St. Paul Gophers)

Steve Kraljic Collection

- The Twins hosted the Indians for a Negro Leagues tribute game on August 7, 2010. For the third time since 1997, they wear throwbacks honoring the 1909 “Colored Gophers.”.
- The uniforms, again made by AIS, use the same ¼-button pullover design as in 2005, but all lettering and wordmarks are rendered in twill instead of felt.
- Back numbers are Block Bold, one-color (white) no player names.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1951 AA Minneapolis Millers

Original 1951 Millers Jersey shows the replica was faithfully executed.

From the Twins' Press release: The Minnesota Twins are looking forward to their "Turn Back the Clock" game on Saturday, June 30 at 6:10 p.m. against the Kansas City Royals. During the game, the Twins will celebrate Minnesota baseball history by wearing throwback uniforms of the 1951 Minneapolis Millers …. Named for the city's flour milling heritage, the Minneapolis Millers played in the Mill City from 1884–1960. The Kansas City Royals will be wearing throwback uniforms of the Kansas City Blues.

"While generations of residents may not even be aware of the Minneapolis Millers, or that a 4,000 seat ballpark once stood at 31st and Nicollet, we're proud to celebrate and remember this important time in Minnesota baseball history," said Clyde Doepner, Twins Curator. "The Minneapolis Millers stoked the fires of America's burgeoning new pastime at the turn of the 20th Century and for more than six decades, this area was a hotbed for great baseball featuring many of the greatest players the game has ever known."

Among the baseball greats to don the Millers uniform over the years were Ted Williams, who won the American Association's Triple Crown as a 19-year old Miller in the summer of 1938. Babe Ruth appeared in a Millers uniform, if only for one day in 1935. Joe Hauser set a Professional Baseball record with 69 Home Runs during the 1933 season. During the "Turn Back the Clock" game, the Twins will be remembering 1951, a year that saw Willie Mays roam Center Field at Nicollet Park, putting the baseball world on notice by posting a .477 average with 30 RBI and 38 runs scored in his 35 games with the Millers. Occupying Center Field for the Kansas City Blues of the American Association that same year was baseball legend Mickey Mantle."

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1994

The Twins visited the Rangers on July 7, 2012, during the Rangers' season-long 50th birthday celebration. Both teams wear 1994-style uniforms.

The Twins' uniforms are exact recreations of the team's gray pinstripes worn from 1987 to 2009—a 23-year run.

Block with Serif numbers in red and navy are used on front and back. Navy player names are sewn on nameplates for uncommon accuracy, though the period need for nameplates to allow jersey recycling clearly does not apply here. The addition of the 1994-only MLB 125th Anniversary patch on the right sleeve completes the look.

These uniforms are identical in every way to the Twins' everyday road grays, as made by Majestic through 2010, aside from the inclusion of the 1994 MLB 125th Anniversary patch on the sleeve. These are truly a "Turn Back the Clock"...to yesterday.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Negro Leagues Tribute (1909 St. Paul Gophers)

July 21, 2012: As they had done three times before, the Twins dressed in navy blue uniforms representing the St. Paul Colored Gophers of the Negro Leagues for this tribute game, hosted by the Kansas City Royals. The uniforms are again made by AIS and appear identical to those worn in 2005 and 2010. Back numbers are white Varsity Bold.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Memorial Day

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

The Twins were the guests on May 27 at Milwaukee, and like all the teams in MLB, wore camouflage-accented jerseys for the day in support of U.S. military personnel. The Twins chose to modify their road gray jersey. On all wordmarks, numbers and player names, the top layer of twill was replaced with desert camouflage twill, and therefore very difficult to read. At least the Twins' lettering was outlined with red or navy making it at least somewhat more visible than other teams.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Turn Back the Clock to 1948 AA St. Paul Saints

Representative tagging, but not from this jersey

From the Twins' Press Release:

The Minnesota Twins today announced plans for their "Turn Back the Clock" game on Thursday, May 30 at 7:10 p.m. against the Milwaukee Brewers. During the game, the Twins will celebrate Minnesota baseball history by wearing throwback uniforms of the 1948 St. Paul Saints, while the Brewers will play as the 1948 Milwaukee Brewers.

During the "Turn Back the Clock" game, the Twins will be remembering the St. Paul Saints of 1948, a year that saw future Hall of Famer Roy Campanella become the first African American to play in the American Association. During 1948, Manager Walter Alston, who also became a member of the National Baseball Hall of Fame, coached such greats as Eric "The Red" Tipton and Dan Bankhead, the first African American pitcher in Major League Baseball.

For 2013, the Twins had proposed to have "home and road" throwback events together with the Brewers where these sets of uniforms would be worn twice, once at home and once on the road. However, the Brewers decline, citing an already crowded schedule of throwback games, which leaves the Twins to wear the road throwbacks at home. These very plain gray (road) uniforms worn for this game at home by the Minnesota Twins; Block Bold back numbers are the only player customization.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Memorial Day

The Twins were at home for Memorial Day 2014, Monday May 26, against the visiting Rangers. Again, all teams in MLB wore uniforms with camouflage twill wordmarks and player names/numbers. The Twins home uniforms at least feature navy outlining for wordmark and player numbers, making their attire more readable than most. Names on back are in one-color desert camouflage, rendering them nearly invisible. The All-Star Game patch adorns the right sleeve on all game worn jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1984

With better advance planning this year, the Twins and Brewers were able to schedule companion home and road games with both teams wearing the same sets of 1984 throwback uniforms. The first game was June 3 in Milwaukee, and the next was June 5 in Minneapolis. The Majestic-made uniforms are quite accurate, though players generally wear them much baggier than was typical in 1984, when skintight cuts were the norm. These replicas are far more accurate than the 2004 examples, which had been made by Russell. To be critical, the front wordmark is not sewn at a steep enough angle, the player numbers use the wrong font and are not the correct size (they should be Varsity, but are rendered in Block), and the player names—rather than appearing in the Twins-only tall, skinny font—are done in standard Block.

Actual jersey from the 1984 era, for comparison

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Memorial Day

The Twins are home again for Memorial Day on May 25, 2015, however, with their uniform updates that year, their camo jersey is brand new. Based on their home jersey, this Majestic Cool Base entry features desert camo replacing the top layer of twill throughout. Front wordmark and back number are now camo/red/gold drop shadow, while name on back is camo/red. Remaining jersey elements stay the same, except the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag, which is changed to dark green/khaki/white from its typical colors from 2014.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palette might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar.

The Twins wear their road gray jerseys with the red-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in blue, including their front logo as well as front and back numbers. Player names on back are in blue. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016-2017 Mother's Day

All teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms for Mother's Day on May 8, 2016 and May 13–14, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Twins wear their road gray jerseys and their typically three-color front lettering and front and back numbers lose their drop shadow to become pink with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue/red/blue, becomes pink.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Twins apply the camouflage trimmings to their road gray jerseys for the game on May 30. The typically three-color front lettering and back numbers lose their 3D drop shadow and are rendered in two-color woodland camo with a black outline, while player names appear in single-color black. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are also simplified to single-color black from blue/gold/red.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016-2017 Father's Day

All teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms for Father's Day on June 19, 2016 and June 17 (day game) and 18, 2017. (For the night game of their June 17 doubleheader against the Indians, the Twins wore their home jerseys instead.) All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The Twins wear their home white jerseys and their typically three-color front lettering and front and back numbers lose their drop shadow to become light blue with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue/gold/red, becomes dark gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Twins are at home and wear their alternate red jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Twins select the blue twill version with gray outlines to replace their front lettering and normally three-color back numbers (with 3D drop shadows removed here), with a gray player name on back. On the front of the jersey, the blue "C" takes the star-pattern blue twill, while the white "T" remains the same, and the usual gold outline becomes gray – some very subtle changes that would not seem much different from the standard jersey when viewed from a distance. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016, team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors, though in this case, it is another very subtle change visible mostly in the replacement of the gold patch border with white. All jersey trim, normally blue/gold, becomes single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Memorial Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Twins apply this style to their home white jerseys as worn on May 27–29, 2017.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill – appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1 (day game of a doubleheader) and 2, 2017, the Twins wear their road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the new twill–appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 3–4, 2017, the Twins wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017, the Twins wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and red sleeves with white nicknames and red numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. The front features their home jersey lettering, here rendered in red/white kiss-cut lightweight twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Memorial Day

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, with dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers joined by solid-color black player names on back. The outlines are nearly impossible to see as the two colors are so close in hue to each other. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are again simplified to single-color black, and a green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the US military, is stitched to the right sleeve. The Twins apply this style to their road gray jerseys on May 26–28, 2018.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Independence Day

The 2018 Independence Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017 featuring printed twill with a pattern of stars and stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the lettering—red/blue or blue/red, and the Twins change their color combo for 2018. The jerseys themselves are Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging, and a ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 2–4, 2018, the Twins wear their road gray jerseys with red patterned twill/blue front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color red.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year; a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly-colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24–26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The Twins wear jerseys with powder blue bodies and navy blue sleeves with white nicknames and red numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. The front features their throwback Twins script with underscore, here rendered in red/white kiss-cut twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Negro Leagues Tribute (1909 St. Paul Gophers)

For the fifth time, the Twins wear throwbacks honoring the 1909 St. Paul Colored Gophers on June 23, 2019—this time made by Majestic for the first time. This full-knit jersey includes a few differences from the most recent AIS version: blue buttons instead of white, changes to the front logo, and Block-style numbers instead of Varsity Bold. These details have evolved over the years, as this marks the third different manufacturer used for this throwback style.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Twins wear a white version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray with gray nickname on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

Prototypes and Oddballs

1971 Spring Training Tryout Jersey

Rawlings gray flannel with all-twill lettering. One wonders if the poor fellow issued this three-digit number ever had any real chance of making the team.

© GameWornGuides.com

1971 Prototype Road

The jersey pictured here was offered at auction by Leland's in 2010. The catalog description says:

"This is a super-rare 1971 prototype jersey that is not game used but was used by (Tony) Oliva to model a possible change from flannel to knit jerseys. This road jersey has the number "6" on the back and is a Spalding professional button front knit jersey. There is a "71" label to the left of the tag and a size "42" to the right. The jersey shows great game use. In 1971 Oliva won his third straight batting title with a .337 average. Excellent piece for the Oliva and Twins fan."

Hard to imagine "game use" if it was not used by the team, but overlooking that nit, notice the reversal of most colors. Knit sleeve trim has gray stripe in the middle instead of white, the red and blue stripes are switched between actual game jersey (inset, right) and prototype.

All lettering on the prototype is identical to the flannel jersey. The actual 1972 jersey as used reversed the colors to make red the main color of both wordmark and back numbers.

Right: Actual 1972 jersey as used on the field.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 Prototype Road

This jersey appeared in a prior edition of the Guide, explaining that I had wrestled with whether or not to include it. It appears to be a 1972 or 1973 Twins road jersey prototype made by Wilson. The button-front design features wide sleeve-end stripes similar to the team-adopted gray 1972 Spalding road jersey, though the lettering design slightly deviates from specification. This jersey changed hands at auction twice between 2005 and 2008.

A photo has since surfaced showing a Twins player wearing a prototype flannel jersey with the same unusual script (top right, dated January 1961), identifying it as the design used for the team's inaugural uniform. In addition, a newly acquired close-up image of the faded neck tag (bottom, center) supports its authenticity as a prototype. These white tags are commonly found inside Wilson prototype jerseys.

Also note the white cotton lining inside the neck, a typical feature of 1970s pro-model Wilson jerseys designed to improve player comfort.

Tag has several style codes, and likely translates roughly to: "Model #A4576 Stretch knit jersey, 100% Polyester, 4" Tackle Twill lettering on front in two-color, rounded shirt tail"

New information courtesy of Uni Watch (www.uni-watch.com), Mr. Jim Lonetti identified as the owner of the Twins prototype jersey

© GameWornGuides.com

1974(?) Prototype Road

This jersey exhibits all the hallmarks of a manufacturer's prototype sample: a white style-data tag stitched into the inside back below the collar, and a number corresponding to a manager or iconic player—in this case, long-time Twin Harmon Killebrew. The design is a powder blue button-front style, which the team never wore. The Wilson tag inside the collar matches a format not introduced until 1974.

© GameWornGuides.com

1974 Sample Road

Although this powder blue pullover design was adopted by the Twins for the 1973 season, this particular jersey features a Wilson collar tag that does not appear until 1974. The white data tag inside the neck lists all the specifications used to describe it for manufacturing. The number 22 was not especially significant, as it corresponded at the time to infielder Craig Kusick. This appears to be a salesman's sample jersey, likely used by Wilson to demonstrate manufacturing capabilities when marketing to colleges, semi-pro teams, or minor league organizations.

© GameWornGuides.com

1984 Batting Practice Retail?

This pullover mesh jersey features knit sleeve ends and neck trim and is made by Sand-Knit for the Twins. The front displays the same team script as seen on the Sand-Knit zip-neck jersey featured earlier, though this version has a slightly heavier stroke and a thicker tail. This script differs from that used on Majestic batting practice jerseys and official game uniforms.

This example may be a store-bought retail version or an unissued authentic. It remains in near-perfect original condition and lacks a back number. Twins collectors continue to debate whether this style was ever worn by the team, as it is absent from baseball card photos depicting players in Spring Training and is not documented among game-worn examples in the hobby.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987 Oddball Retail Authentic — Splitting Up Twins?

This is an amusing example of why it's important to avoid using words like "always" and "never" when publishing research. Earlier in this text, a small catalog illustration of a Twins jersey is shown (right), along with my paraphrased warning: "Never buy jerseys based on a stock photo. This is clearly an artist's mock-up, as the Twins wordmark does not split in that location."

Reader Brian Isles sent photos of a jersey he found on eBay, showing that some Twins jerseys were, in fact, made with the wordmark split in that very manner. Since the jersey was a "Replica" and not an Authentic, I initially dismissed it and explained to Brian that the guidelines I referenced didn't apply to replica merchandise.

Left: The Twins jersey at its unveiling in 1987 and modeled by star Kent Hrbek, the accepted word split is clearly visible. The details of this example, including the inside seam tag identifies it with a 2002–2009 date of manufacture.

A few months later, Brian wrote again with his latest discovery: an Authentic-tagged jersey with the same split wordmark, complete with inside-seam tagging identifying it as a Majestic Authentic (retail-sale) jersey (left).

The replica above features a single-layer appliqué wordmark, while the jersey at left has a two-layer twill wordmark, a sleeve patch introduced in 2002, and the Silhouetted Batter logo on the back of the collar—a detail that began appearing in 2000. Among the thousands of Twins jersey photos we've reviewed, including official unveiling and press day shots, the wordmark consistently splits between the "W" and the "I"—never within the "W." I have no explanation!

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2002 Alternate Batting Practice?

This batting practice jersey stumps us, as it has the team's alternate logo on the chest. The presence of the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the neck places it no earlier than 2000, but since the team adopted Cool Base BP jerseys as early as 2003, this jersey stands out as an anomaly. T The neck tag and "XL" sizing suggest a retail-oriented piece rather than a team-issued jersey, and the "CH50" code on the tag is unfamiliar to us.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002: A Singular Memorial — Mike Jackson “JW” Patch

Twins pitcher Mike Jackson added the Indians’ “JW” memorial patch to the chest of his jersey in 2002 in honor of Indians trainer Jimmy Warfield, based on their relationship when Jackson was with the team from 1997–1999. Warfield passed away in July 2002, and although Jackson wore the patch on at least two of his jerseys—including during postseason appearances—he did not wear it consistently throughout the season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2011 Mystery Turn Back the Clock to 1973-1986

Here we have two mysterious examples of a Twins Turn Back the Clock jersey that is based on their 1973–1986 home design. The team wore similar jerseys—made by Rawlings—for a throwback game in 2000, but no additional TBTC game appearance for this style has been documented. The Majestic tagging dates these jerseys to approximately 2000–2012, a span during which Majestic manufactured jerseys for the Twins from 2005–2012. And while the Twins have worn throwback and fauxback designs in regular season games, this specific style was not among them. It's possible these jerseys were made as samples for potential throwback designs that were ultimately not selected. Oddly, each example has a different code on the wash tag, the #16 jersey with "62TB' and the #8 with "62TBH". Regardless, both tag codes have appeared on team-issued throwbacks, making it unlikely that these are retail jerseys.

Given that team legends Frank Viola (#16) and Gary Gaetti (#8) wore this jersey style between 1982–1986, it's possible these were created for a ceremony or event that has not yet been documented—or perhaps were never used. However, both players are also most closely associated with the team's 1987 World Series championship, by which time the Twins had switched to pinstriped, button-down home jerseys. This makes the 1973–1986 style an unusual choice for any kind of old-timers recognition or commemorative use. Likewise, neither players' number has been retired by the team, so these numbers, though suggestive of both players, are not exclusive to them.

If any readers have more info about these jerseys, please send it our way!

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Prototype Road Vest

The Twins introduced a home vest in 2006, otherwise identical to their standard home jersey. Shown here is a prototype version of that vest. All the typical prototype markers are present: a size 46 jersey, “Player” and the year (6 for 2006) on the back, and sample tagging reading “TWI-HM-ALT-V-06,” indicating “Twins Home Alternate Vest 2006.”

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 Ooops

Below: Orlando Hudson's jersey was missing a front number on Opening Day 2010.

The Twins' equipment manager endured some rough moments in 2008.

- Top left: When the team first wore their home blue alternate jerseys on April 1, the front numbers were sewn in red with white outlines—rather than the correct white with red outlines. Additionally, the player names on the back were solid white instead of the expected white outlined in red.
- Bottom left: Both of these errors were fixed by April 6, the next time the alternate jerseys were worn. Imagine the fun correcting this massive error.
- Top middle: A reminder that humans still sew MLB uniforms—and that people make mistakes—note the amusing misspelling of the state name on this player's road jersey.

Above: Joe Nathan at the 2005 All-Star game, "Twins" with no dot over the "i."

Credits: Borrowed shamelessly from Paul Lukas' "Uni Watch" blog, current edition can be found at www.uni-watch.com

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 St. Patrick's Day Retail

This green batting practice jersey is another retail-only Twins item, with tags and style dating it to 2007–2010. The team last wore green on St. Patrick's Day in 2008, but wore a full-button mesh BP jersey rather than this pullover style. The "TC" logo on the front echoes the design used on the team's standard BP jersey of the era, although it appears smaller here. Additionally, the team-issued versions used a flocked, heat-pressed logo, unlike the sewn twill seen on this retail jersey. The front logo appears disproportionately small—closer in size to a sleeve patch than a typical chest insignia. The XL sizing and 6800 style code confirm this as a retail item, not a team-issued piece—making it unlikely that it was a sample of an unused design.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010 Prototypes?

Likely created in preparation for the team's 2010 uniform update, these two prototype proposals reached the "in-the-cloth" evaluation stage. Both prototypes feature a gray drop shadow added to the team wordmarks, including a refreshed version of the "Twins" script adopted in 2010. The home version uses Cool Base fabric, while the road version is full-weight knit and lacks the pinstripes that were standard at the time. Neither uses nameplates; both feature sleeve patches. As is often the case with prototypes, they are lettered with the name and number of a popular player. Neither proposal was accepted as-is. However, the updated "Twins" script was adopted without the shadow, and the block "Minnesota" wordmark was replaced by a script variant similar to the "Twins" lettering in the final 2010 design.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010 Oddball Alternate Home Vest

- The Twins listed this vest as part of their official 2010 uniform lineup, although it was rarely worn since its introduction in 2006.
- The 2010 on-field version would have featured the updated 2010 wordmark used across the team's other jerseys..
- However, my search through game photos found no evidence that the team ever wore vests in a game during 2010. One must wonder, did a team-issued set of these elusive garments ever actually exist?
- This retail-style 2010 vest, with the revised front wordmark and no nameplate, appears unworn. It retains its paper hanger tags, and the "0062" internal label typically found in team-issued jerseys.
- The vest was ultimately dropped from the Twins' uniform rotation before the 2011 season.

Even among insiders, there is ongoing debate about whether any of these were actually made for the team in 2010. According to Twins chapter editor Jeff Barak, who worked in the team's main retail store (which handled all game-worn and team-issued jerseys), none of these vests were ever offered for sale—casting doubt on whether any were made at all.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 Unused Batting Practice

There are likely dozens of such design exercises for every team and in most years where style changes are considered, but only occasionally do they get out into circulation. This Majestic-tagged prototype batting practice jersey was evaluated for the 2011 season. It features a red back panel—similar to that used by the Indians in 2011—but the Twins ultimately opted for a more conservative design with a solid navy back panel.

Below: The actual 2011 batting practice jersey worn by the team.*

Comparing the prototype to the final version highlights the Twins' general tendency to favor conservative, less flashy uniform designs—a consistent theme across many of their team style decisions.

© GameWornGuides.com

Odds and Ends

Left: In the 1980s, Twins jerseys with names on back were often recycled to the minor leagues. Rather than removing the name, teams typically covered it with a blank nameplate. When that blank plate was later removed, it frequently revealed a darker, non-sun-faded area around the original name — as shown in the example here.

Left: Neck trim applied in reverse order.

Right: Oops. But I'll bet you had to look twice to see it.

That's not how he spells it…

© GameWornGuides.com

Commemorative Patches

Twins Patches

The Twins opted not to wear the 1985 All-Star Game patch on their jersey sleeves. This is what the patch looked like.

1986

1991

- 1986: 25 Years.
- 1991: 30th Anniversary.
- 2000: 40th Season &"CRG" Calvin Griffith Memorial patch (shown: worn on opposite sleeve from 40th Season patch).
- 2004: Cursive "Eloise" memorial patch worn on the left sleeve in honor of Carl Pohlad's wife. Variants were used to match all three jersey fabric colors..
- 2005: Twins 40th Anniversary of the 1965 AL Championship.
- 2006: Memorial "34" patch for Kirby Puckett. Black with a white outline to ensure visibility on gray and navy jerseys. On vests, the patch was positioned above the "T" in "Twins" on the upper right chest.

2004

2006

2000

2005

© GameWornGuides.com

April 2–8, 2007

May 9–11, 2008

May 11 was also Mother's Day, and the Twins also wore a pink ribbon patch on their jersey fronts that day.

Smaller version as used on vest

2007, starting April 9

August 1, 2008

- 2007, April 2–8 : Armband in memory of broadcaster Herb Carneal, who passed away on April 1.
- 2007, starting April 9: A circular Herb memorial patch for Carneal was worn on the chest of the home vest. This version was only used in a single game—August 31, 2007, during the first game of a doubleheader.
- 2008, May 9–11: 150 Years of Statehood" patch worn on jersey fronts. May 11 (Mother's Day) also featured a pink ribbon variant.
- 2008, August 1: "Interstate 35W" patch worn in remembrance of the tragic bridge collapse that occurred one year earlier.

© GameWornGuides.com

- 2009: Metrodome closing patch.
- 2009: “Carl” black oval memorial patch worn all season for owner Carl Pohlad.
- 2010: Inaugural Season (Target Field) on home white and home alternate blue.
- 2010: “50 Seasons” patch worn on the right sleeve of road gray and retro home alternate jerseys.
- 2011: Black “3” memorial patch honoring Harmon Killebrew added to all uniforms after May 17. Patch on blue jerseys uses a white outline for visibility.

2010

2009

2011

Before the 2009 season, the Twins announced that all jerseys would feature the Metrodome patch on the right sleeve, with the alternate vest displaying it on the left chest. After owner Carl Pohlad passed away that winter, a “Carl” memorial patch was added beneath the Metrodome patch on all jerseys. The vest, however, displayed only the Carl patch on the left chest, omitting the Metrodome patch entirely.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014

April 7, 2014

August 1, 2015

September 9, 2016

2016: April 13, June 14, July 21

April 3, 2017

- 2014: All-Star Game patch worn all season on the right sleeve of all uniforms..
- 2014, April 7: “Stand Up To Cancer” patch worn by the Twins and Oakland A’s for the Twins home opener, honoring Twins GM Terry Ryan as he battled squamous cell carcinoma. A lump had been found in a lymph node, and Ryan had not yet returned to work at the time.
- 2015, August 1: 50th Anniversary patch commemorating the 1965 AL Champions, worn on the right sleeve of the retro home alternate jersey.
- 2016, April 13, June 14, July 21: “Heart of 29” patch worn in recognition of Rod Carew’s campaign against heart disease. Carew, a heart failure survivor, wore number 29 during his Twins career.
- 2016, September 9: Twins and visiting Indians wore a “11 Jacob” patch in memory of 11-year-old Jacob Wetterling, who disappeared in 1989. Wetterling’s killer confessed in 2016; Jacob had worn number 11 in youth sports.
- 2017, April 3: “YL” patch worn in memory of prospect Yorman Landa, who died in an off-season accident.

© GameWornGuides.com

July 22, 2017

June 15, 2019

2020

- 2017, July 22: 330th anniversary of the 1987 World Series championship, worn on the right sleeve of the home jersey.
- 2019 June 15: Joe Mauer number retirement, right sleeve of dark blue alternate jersey
- 2020: Twins 60 season patch, right sleeve of all jerseys.
- 2020, July 24 and 28: "RC" patch for Ryan Costello, a prospect who died November 2019. Worn for first game of the season (road jersey) and home opener (home jersey).
- 2021: “MB” memorial patch for bench coach Mike Bell, who passed away before the season, right sleeve
- 2022, July 16: Jim Kaat Number Retirement, right sleeve home jersey
- 2023, May 20: Green Mental Health Awareness ribbon, left chest, in recognition of Mental Health Awareness Month.
- 2023, July 3: M Rad patch on left chest in memory of Mike Radcliff, longtime Twins scout
- 2024, August 11: Patch commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Washington Senators’ 1924 World Series championship.
- 2025, May 27–28: Green Mental Health Awareness ribbon, left chest, in recognition of Mental Health Awareness Month.

July 24 and 28, 2020

2021

July 16, 2022

July 3, 2023

August 11, 2024

May 20, 2023 and May 27–28, 2025

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Twins Advertising Patches

Home white, blue alternate, City Connect

Road gray, cream alternate

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Twins struck a sponsor patch deal with Securian Financial, a financial service group. The patches first appeared on July 18, 2025. There are two versions of the patch, a white patch with a blue border and the Securian logo for the home, blue alternate, and City Connect jerseys; and a blue patch with a blue border and the Securian logo for the road gray and cream alternate jerseys.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch.

Unlike many other clubs, the Twins did not adjust sleeve patch placement by player handedness in 2023; instead, patches appeared consistently on the left sleeve for all players. Beginning in 2024, however, patch placement varied by handedness, in preparation for an ad deal that did not materialize until halfway through the following season.

© GameWornGuides.com

Twins Postseason Patches

1987 World Series (the Twins did not wear this patch on their sleeves during the 1987 World Series)

1991 World Series
(right sleeve)

2017 AL Wild Card
(right sleeve)

2019 AL Division Series
(right sleeve, above MLB150 patch)

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

1976 Bert Blyleven Minnesota Twins Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: October 12, 2021 Certification Number: 211012J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1976 Minnesota Twins, Wilson size 46 home pullover jersey issued to #28, pitcher Bert Blyleven. 2 1/2" knit, Navy/white/red sleeve end trim, ¾" similar-colored v-neck trim. "Twins" team scripted on a slant with underline on the front, all lettering in red outlined with Navy blue. Wilson Varsity "28" on the left front and centered on the back, no player name on back as is correct for the team and year. The colorful Twins team patch is sewn to the left sleeve.

A 2011 inductee into the Baseball Hall of Fame, in his 22-year career Blyleven's 3701 strikeouts rank as the fifth highest in history. His number 28 is retired by the Twins. Blyleven began his MLB career playing for the Twins 1970-1976. Engaged in contentious contact negotiations with the team in 1976, and after a poor outing May 31, 1976, Blyleven offered an obscene gesture to the crowd after being pulled from a game. He was traded the next day to the Texas Rangers. He had appeared in only 12 games for the Twins so far that year, going 4-5 with a 3.12 ERA.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag correct for 1976 showing the size 46, (reasonable for the player) stitched inside into the back of the neck. "76 Set 2" is hand chain stitched in blue in the Wilson stitcher's familiar handwriting onto a rectangle strip of jersey-type knit fabric zig-zag stitched to the outside left tail.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is in excellent original condition, showing signs of light use and having been washed. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original and unaltered. All stitching is original and tight. All lettering elements remain crisp and bright. Given that Blyleven played for the 1976 Twins for just under two months, the condition of this jersey is appropriate, and clearly it was pulled from use, avoiding reissue and multiple Spring Training use/abuse so typical of Twins uniforms of the period.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriately light use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue and was worn by Bert Blyleven of the Minnesota Twins during the 1976 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Kirby Puckett 1992 Minnesota Twins Autographed Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: January 13, 2023 Certification Number: 22-0113J04

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Full-weight Russell six button front, knit pinstriped Minnesota Twins jersey, #34. Cloudy-clear two-hole buttons as typically used by the Twins. All lettering and numbers stitched in layer-cut red outlined in Navy tackle twill. On the front left and on the back, number "34" in the proper position, fonts and twill colors for the 1992 Twins. There is no name on back, as is correct. It is a size 50, which is a consistent size for Puckett game jerseys at this stage of his career. The Twins team wordmark in their own custom font is sewn across both panels at an angle with an underline. Team's secondary logo "TC" patch is stitched on the left sleeve. There are strips of Velcro closure sewn between the middle three buttonholes, and these strips were sewn there after the front lettering was applied as the stitching is visible going through them. This Velcro was a tailoring feature preferred by Puckett. The jersey is autographed on the right chest below the wordmark without any additional inscription. I have no professional opinion on the autograph, but is has a serialized Beckett sticker on the Russell tag that would refer to the autograph. This jersey was presented to me without the accompanying Beckett certificate.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Diamond Collection locker-style manufacturer size 50 tag on the bottom left outside tail in the appropriate 1992-early 1994 style. The 100% polyester flag tag is pinch-sewn under the bottom right edge of the Russell tail tag, this tag is found on team issued jerseys. The presence of this tag and the lack of a neck size tag distinguishes Russell team-spec jerseys from retail ones. Russell manufacturer logo is embroidered into the end of the right sleeve in red and Navy Blue. A rectangle of double-knit fabric approximately 4" long and 1" high has the numbers 92-2 screened on them in black Plastisol ink, matching exemplars for team issue.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all lettering is original and unaltered. There are no signs of any repairs, and this jersey has been worn and washed, as the tags have softened and curled, and the edges of the twill lettering have softened and frayed slightly. There are a couple of small dirt splatter stains on jersey body. It is clear that the wear on this jersey occurred before it was autographed.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

At left, exemplar year tagging and Russell tag from another 1992 reliably authenticated Twins home jersey. At right are the tags from the jersey in our review.

Conclusion: This jersey is in excellent lightly used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It is the proper size, the proper tagging and the wear on it occurred prior to its being autographed. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Kirby Puckett of the 1992 Minnesota Twins.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

David Ortiz 1997 Minnesota Twins Game Worn Road Alternate Jersey

Examination Date: April 14, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0414J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Russell size 48 six-button, Navy blue button-front road alternate Minnesota Twins jersey, lettered for #27 David Ortiz. Solid navy body with red soutache 1" from each sleeve end and ringing the placket. "Minnesota" vertically arched across the front in white outline with red. Beneath on the left side is the player number 27 in the proper font, in red outlined with white, That number repeats on the back in the same colors, and above is the player's name "ORTIZ" Arched in white over red on a serged-edge matching blue nameplate. The Twins team disk patch is stitched to the left sleeve; on the right sleeve is the 1997-only Jackie Robinson commemorative patch. Velcro is added between the middle three button closures. Ortiz wore size 48 jerseys in the minors and up through 1997, and then wore size 50 for several seasons thereafter.

Ortiz was acquired by the Twins before the 1997 season, and was likely expected to be called up at some point in the season, as this jersey was made with the original team sets before the start of the regular season. He was called up in September and played 15 games before the season's end, nine of then on the road when this jersey could have been worn. Because he played in so few games in 1997, his rookie season is officially considered to be 1998, when he started the year on the Twins roster.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Russell trademark "R" is directly embroidered in white to the right sleeve and, and the Russell Diamond Collection locker tag in the correct style for 1997 is sewn to the outside left tail. Pinch-sewn under the bottom hem of that tag is a small fabric tab that reads "100% Polyester". That tag, plus the absence of a size tab in the neck area hallmarks of team-issue style jerseys from Russell, compared to those made for retail sale. Stitched inside the back of the collar is a rectangular mylar tag with computer-generated printing on it that reads 27-97-1 (player #27, 1997, set 1). Correct for 1997 Twins jerseys, the stitching from this tag is visible from the outside back of the collar. In reviewing exemplars, I will comment that this is the only 1997 Ortiz (claimed game worn) jersey I have found to date that has team specification neck tagging.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows clear signs of honest use. The twill and patches are softened from washing, and the team tagging inside the neck is slightly discolored and somewhat puckered. The small 100% Polyester flag tag on the front left is slightly discolored, curled and frayed from use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good game-used condition, is properly lettered and exhibits no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for and worn by David Ortiz of the 1997 Minnesota Twins.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Letter of Professional Opinion

Dave Winfield 1993 Minnesota Twins Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: July 16, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0716J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Russell size 50 with two inches extra length (both marked and measured) six-button, gray with Navy pinstripes button-front road Minnesota Twins jersey, lettered for #32, Hall of Fame outfielder Dave Winfield. "Minnesota" vertically arched across the front in red outlined with Navy Blue. Beneath on the left side is the player number 32 in the proper font, in red outlined with Navy, That number repeats on the back in the same colors, and above is the player's name "WINFIELD" arched in single color navy on a serged-edge gray knit nameplate. The Twins team disk patch is stitched to the left sleeve. Typical of so many Twins on-field game jerseys, Velcro is added between the middle three button closures. Winfield wore size 50 jerseys at this point late in his career, and preferred extra length tailoring. In 1993, Winfield appeared in 143 games for the Twins, mostly as their designated hitter, batting .271 with 21 home runs. On September 16, 1993, at age 41, he collected his 3,000th career hit with a single off Oakland Athletics closer Dennis Eckersley. In his 21 year career, he played for five major league teams most notably the Padres and Yankees. He was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame on his first ballot in 2001, and was the first Padre so honored. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Russell trademark "R" is directly embroidered in red and blue to the right sleeve and, and the Russell Diamond Collection locker tag in the correct style for 1993 ("flat" Diamond tag lettering as opposed to the later, more slanted style) is sewn to the outside left tail. Pinch-sewn under the bottom hem of that tag is a small fabric tab that reads "100% Polyester", layered with a longer tag that reads 2" extra body length. These tags, plus the absence of a size tab in the neck area hallmarks of team-issue style jerseys from Russell, compared to those made for retail sale. Stitched inside the back of the collar is a rectangular mylar tag with screened-on Plastisol style ink on it that reads 32-93-3 (player #32, 1993, set 3). Correct for 1993 Twins jerseys, the stitching from this tag is visible from the outside back of the collar. In reviewing exemplars, I will comment that while other similar jerseys have been offered at auction. this is the only 1993 Winfield (claimed game worn) jersey I have seen to date that has complete team specification neck tagging, including his jersey number on the tag.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows clear signs of honest and extended use. The twill and patches are softened and slightly puckered from washing, and the team tagging inside the neck is slightly discolored and also puckered. The tail special tailoring and 100% Polyester flag tag on the front left are slightly discolored, curled and frayed from use. There are several light dirt stains on the body, small pulls in the fabric, and the lettering edges are slightly frayed and softened from use.

Below: Exemplar tagging from other 1993 Twins jerseys in our exemplar library.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good game-used condition, is properly lettered and exhibits no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for and worn by Dave Winfield of the 1993 Minnesota Twins.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Chapter 39

Chicago White Sox

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970 -2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

White Sox Uniform History Notes

- During the first two decades of the double-knit era (1970–1990), the White Sox were one of the most experimental and unconventional teams in baseball when it came to uniform design. Since 1990, however, they've undergone a striking transformation, adopting a much more traditional and consistent visual identity. This split history—radical early shifts followed by long-term visual stability—makes the White Sox one of the more fascinating case studies in uniform evolution.
- 1970's uniforms marked the final year of conservative designs that had been offered in the 1950s and 1960s. Rather plain in appearance with minimal trim and the old-time traditional "SOX" wordmark logo on the home jersey left chest, while road uniforms featured an understated Chicago script with an underline, in white/blue on a gray background.
- In 1971, the team introduced a major shift in color. While retaining wool flannel, they added bright red pinstripes and logos to the home uniforms and adopted powder blue road uniforms with vivid red accents. Both sets also adopt full zipper fronts. This begins a new phase of bold experimentation that would last through the decade.
- By 1972, the White Sox had entered the double-knit era. Though the design largely mimicked the 1971 set, the fabric switch made the colors appear even more vibrant, and the uniforms took on a tighter, more modern fit, in line with league-wide stylistic trends.
- The 1976 season marked the debut of one of the more infamous uniform sets in baseball history: the untucked "pajama" uniforms—often mocked as "leisure suits," "softball uniforms," and other unflattering names. These navy blue pullovers featured oversized, floppy open-necked collars and were designed to be worn untucked, a radical departure from traditional baseball aesthetics. Player names and numbers were rendered in an ornate "Gaslight" font intended to evoke 1920s nostalgia, but the execution fell flat with fans and critics alike, quickly turning the look into a punchline. The uniforms also offered optional short pants, worn only a few times in 1976, yet vividly remembered for their unconventional appearance. While the design was meant to be a nod to baseball's early decades, the public was not ready to embrace nostalgia through such an eccentric lens.
- After a six-year run, this style was replaced by another groundbreaking design, the "billboard" SOX jerseys of 1982–1986. Supposedly designed via a fan contest (details herein), these uniforms were unique in that they took full advantage of the pullover design of the jerseys, spreading the team nickname in huge letters across the front of both home and road suits, leaving no place for buttons, had there been any.
- For the 1987–1990 seasons, the team shifted to a more traditional and non-controversial aesthetic, perhaps inspired by the Dodgers—white home jerseys and gray road jerseys with script lettering across the chest, paired with button-front tops and belted pants. All traces of the bold 1980s designs were erased. While less adventurous, this design set the stage for the enduring look that would follow.
- In 1990, the White Sox hosted their first "Turn Back the Clock" game, wearing 1917 replica uniforms in a nostalgia-themed promotion. The overwhelming popularity of the throwbacks inspired a full uniform redesign for 1991. The team adopted a new visual identity rooted in classic 1950s and 1960s aesthetics. The new uniforms featured black pinstripes on white at home and conservative gray road uniforms, with a Gothic-script "Sox" logo introduced as the team's new primary mark. These uniforms—simple, bold, and elegant—have become iconic and are still in use today, 35 years later. The team actually jumped the gun and "previewed" the new uniforms during games in the final weeks of the 1990 season.
- A black alternate jersey was introduced in the 1990s and has become the club's most frequently worn style, often used both at home and on the road.
- In 2021, the White Sox debuted their first City Connect uniform. The design featured a black base with dark gray pinstripes and the word "Southside" emblazoned across the chest in bold Gothic script. The aesthetic paid tribute to the team's South Side roots and gritty urban identity. The jersey is so popular that it becomes a permanent alternate in 2025 after its four-year City Connect "cycle" expired at the end of 2024.
- In 2025, the second iteration of the CC jersey appears—a bold red-and-black design blending White Sox heritage with Bulls-inspired visuals. It features a 1930s-style "CHICAGO" wordmark, pinstripes, a winged sock patch, and co-branded crossover details tying together the city's sports legacy.
- The White Sox have embraced the "Turn Back the Clock" concept more than any other MLB franchise, participating in dozens of games since 1990. They've also introduced one-off nostalgic uniforms for weekend home games, including 2001 (1917 throwback), 2006 (1906 throwback), 2012 (1972 throwback), and 2013–2023 (1983 throwback).
- And so, we have come full circle. After adopting nostalgic uniforms for the 1991 season, the White Sox abandoned their penchant for continual change, and have since kept the same home and road designs intact for the past 35 years at this writing.

I am always looking for new information and better photographs. If you can share new information, or offer corrections to this material, please send a note to me, at gameworngnuides@gmail.com. Please tell me which page you are referencing. All contributors will be recognized by name in a future edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Year by Year Summary

White Sox Game Jerseys

Late 1990

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1970	Home Flannel	White Sox Varsity 1 color	Varsity 1 color	4" Block Light 1 color	No	-	-	Wilson
	Road Blue Flannel	White Sox Varsity 1 color	Varsity 2 color	4" Block Light 2 color	No	-	-	Wilson
1971	Home Flannel	Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Team "Sox" Disk	-	Wilson
	Road Blue Flannel	No	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Player #, 2 color Varsity	-	Wilson
1972	Home Red PS	Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Team "Sox" Disk	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	(sleeve) Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Player #, 2 color Varsity	-	Wilson
1973	Home Red PS	Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Team "Sox" Disk	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	(sleeve) Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Player #, 2 color Varsity	-	Wilson
1974	Home Red PS	Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Team "Sox" Disk	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	(sleeve) Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Player #, 2 color Varsity	-	Wilson
1975	Home Red PS	Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Team "Sox" Disk	-	Wilson
	Road Lt Blue	(sleeve) Varsity 2 color	Varsity 2 color	No	-	Player #, 2 color Varsity	-	Wilson
1976	Home White	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
	Road Navy	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1977	Home White	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
	Road Navy	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1978	Home White	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
	Road Navy	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Rawlings
1979	Home White	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Capital Ace
	Road Navy	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Capital Ace
1980	Home White	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Capital Ace
	Road Navy	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Capital Ace
1981	Home White	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Capital Ace
	Road Navy	No	Fancy 1 color	Fancy 1 color	No	-	-	Capital Ace
1982	Home White	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	-	-	Sand Knit
	Road Gray	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	-	-	Sand Knit
1983	Home White	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	All Star Game	-	Sand Knit
	Road Gray	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	All Star Game	-	Sand Knit
1984	Home White	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	6/46 patch	-	Sand Knit
	Road Gray	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	6/46 patch	-	Sand Knit
1985	Home White	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	Comiskey 75th	-	Sand Knit
	Road Gray	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	Comiskey 75th	-	Sand Knit
1986	Home White	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	-	-	Sand Knit
	Road Gray	Numbers on pants	Sand-Knit Varsity 1 color	Sand-Knit Block 1 color	No	-	-	Sand Knit
1987	Home White	Numbers on pants	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
	Road Gray	Numbers on pants	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
1988	Home White	Numbers on pants	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
	Road Gray	Numbers on pants	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
1989	Home White	No	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
1990*	Home White	No	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
	Home White 1991 style	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	Block 2 color		-	-	Rawlings

* The final homestand of 1990 featured a switch to the new home jersey style used full-time starting in 1991

© GameWornGuides.com

1990*-
2020

1990*-
2020

1991 only

1992 only

1993-2020

2001 only

2002-2004

1999-2001
2005-2007

White Sox Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1991	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Comiskey Inaugural	Rawlings
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Comiskey Inaugural	Rawlings
	Alt Black (variant 1)	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Comiskey Inaugural	Rawlings
1992	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Special Black Diamond	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Special Black Diamond	-	Wilson/Russell
	Alt Black (variant 2)	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Special White diamond	-	Russell
1993	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Comiskey Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
1994	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Comiskey Patch	MLB 125th	Wilson/Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	MLB 125th	Wilson/Russell
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	MLB 125th	Wilson/Russell
1995	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Comiskey Patch	95 Years	Wilson/Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	95 Years	Wilson/Russell
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	95 Years	Wilson/Russell
1996	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Comiskey Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
1997	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey Patch	Jackie Robinson	Wilson/Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	Nellie Fox Memorial	Wilson/Russell
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	Nellie Fox Memorial	Wilson/Russell
1998	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson/Russell
1999	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey patch	-	Russell
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Russell
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson
	Alt PS Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey patch	-	Russell / Wilson
2000	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey Patch	-	Russell/Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Russell/Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Wilson
	Alt PS Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey Patch	-	Majestic
2001	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey patch	AL 100 Yrs Charter	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	AL 100 Yrs Charter	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	AL 100 Yrs Charter	Majestic
	Alt PS Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey patch	AL 100 Yrs Charter	Majestic
	1917 Sunday Special	-	Red Sox Style 2 color	No	-	Fancy US Flag	AL 100 Yrs Charter	Majestic
2002	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt "Faux" Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Comiskey Patch	-	Majestic
2003	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	All Star Game	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	All Star Game	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	All Star Game	Majestic
	Alt "Faux" Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	All Star Game	Majestic
2004	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt "Faux" Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic

* 1990 featured a mid-year switch to the new jersey style used full-time starting in 1991

"Vest patch on sleeve" means patch is sewn on undershirt

 The actual vest with the separate undershirt returns in 2005, replacing the "Faux vest" style that had been worn 2002-2004.

Majestic vests have the manufacturer logo sewn on the very top of the left sleeve hole starting in 2005. Prior to 2005, logo is on sleeve of faux vest, or on undershirt of 1999-2001 vest

© GameWornGuides.com

1990-2020

1990-2020

1993-2020

1999-2001
and again
2005-2007

2006 only

Change to Flex Base

2013-2020

White Sox Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2005	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt PS Vest*	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2006	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	2005 WS Champs	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt PS Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Alt 1906 Home Cream	-	Fancy 1 color	-	-	-	-	Majestic
2007	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt PS Vest	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
2008	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
2009	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
2010	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
2011	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
2012	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	"BMS"  "HIC MAN" 	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia 1972	Varsity 2 color	Varsity 10" 2 color	No	-	Team "Sox" Disk	"BMS"  "HIC MAN" 	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	"BMS"  "HIC MAN" 	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	"BMS"  "HIC MAN" 	Majestic
2013	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cond. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
2014	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	DJR Memorial*	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cond. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	DJR Memorial*	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	DJR Memorial*	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	DJR Memorial*	Majestic
2015	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	9 patch/19 patch^	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cond. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	9 patch/19 patch^	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	9 patch/19 patch^	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	9 patch/19 patch^	Majestic
2016	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Eddie Einhorn Patch	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cons. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	Eddie Einhorn Patch	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	Eddie Einhorn Patch	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	Eddie Einhorn Patch	Majestic
2017	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cond. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
2018	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cond. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	-	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Majestic
2019	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cond. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
2020	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	"Farmio" Ed Farmer Mem	Nike
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Cond. 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	"Farmio" Ed Farmer Mem	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	"SOX" Patch	"Farmio" Ed Farmer Mem	Nike
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	"Farmio" Ed Farmer Mem	Nike

 BMS Patch for Bill "Moose" Skowron added May 5
Actual vest returns replacing faux-vest of 2002-2004
 "HIC MAN" patch for coach Kevin Hickey added May 22

* "DJR" patch for David Reinsdorf son of owner Jerry Reinsdorf, added April 2, after opening day, worn on left sleeve 4/2/14; on the right sleeve the rest of the season.
^ Billy Pierce 19 patch added August 11

© GameWornGuides.com

These four styles continue from previous years

White Sox Game Jerseys

Switch to Vapor Premiere Elite

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2021	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	Meryl Reinsdorf memorial*	Nike
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Condensed 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	Meryl Reinsdorf memorial*	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	“SOX” Patch	Meryl Reinsdorf memorial*	Nike
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	Meryl Reinsdorf memorial*	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 2 color	Custom 2 color	Block 1 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	Meryl Reinsdorf memorial*	Nike
2022	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Nike
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Condensed 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983	-	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	“SOX” Patch	-	Nike
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 2 color	Custom 2 color	Block 1 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch	-	Nike
2023	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Nike
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color	Block Condensed 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983‡	-	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	“SOX” Patch‡	-	Nike
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch‡	-	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 2 color	Custom 2 color	Block 1 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch‡	-	Nike
2024	Home White PS	Nike Block 2 color (no perf)	Nike Block 2 color (no perf)	Nike Block 2 color	No	-	-	Nike
	Home Nostalgia Alt 1983	-	Varsity 1 color (perf?)	Nike Block 1 color	No	All Star Game 1983‡	-	Nike
	Road Gray	Nike Block 2 color (perf?)	Nike Block 2 color (perf?)	Nike Block 2 color	No	“SOX” Patch‡	-	Nike
	Alt Black	Nike Block 3 color (perf)	Nike Block 3 color (perf)	Nike Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch‡	-	Nike
	City Connect	Custom 2 color (perf)	Custom 2 color (perf)	Nike Block 1 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch‡	-	Nike
2025	Home White PS	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	-	-	Nike
	Road Gray	Front Block 2 color	Block 2 color	Block 2 color	No	“SOX” Patch‡	-	Nike
	Alt Black	Front Block 3 color	Block 3 color	Block 3 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch‡	-	Nike
	Alt Black “Southside”	Custom 2 color	Custom 2 color	Block 1 color	No	Diamond/Sock Patch‡	-	Nike
	City Connect 2.0	Bulls Varsity 2 color	Bulls Varsity 2 color	Block bold 1 color	No	Winged sock‡	-	Nike

 BMS Patch for Bill "Moose" Skowron added May 5
Actual vest returns replacing faux-vest of 2002-2004
 "HIC MAN" patch for coach Kevin Hickey added May 22

* "DJR" patch for David Reinsdorf son of owner Jerry Reinsdorf, added April 2, after opening day, worn on left sleeve 4/2/14; on the right sleeve the rest of the season.
^ Billy Pierce 19 patch added August 11

© GameWornGuides.com

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1970 Home

Tim Stephan Collection

Click here for a link to the actual Letter of Opinion

The White Sox' 1970 home white flannel design was in its second year of use. This plain white style was introduced in 1969, replacing the pinstriped fabric used in 1968. Thin blue knit trim decorated the collar and placket, with double-striped blue trim on the sleeve ends. The "SOX" logo on front is in blue twill. Player numbers use a font that appears unique to the White Sox. It is a form of Varsity, though very light in stroke on the front numbers. The back numbers are bolder but almost comically tiny, at 5½ inches in height, only a scant inch larger than the front ones. Player names are rendered in a very tall 4" Varsity-light font. Year and set tagging embroidered on the front below the Wilson manufacturer tag. Player name sewn in script on flannel tags inside the collar.

© GameWornGuides.com

1970 Road

Steve Kraljic Collection

- The White Sox' road jersey for 1970 was only in its second year of use. It is made of blue-gray flannel with an attractive "Chicago" script on the front in understated white outlined in blue. The front numbers use a White Sox–exclusive variant of the Varsity font, rendered in the same colors as the front script.
- The colors of the back numbers and player names are reversed—blue with white outlines. Back numbers are very small—less than six inches tall.
- Year and set tagging are sewn directly onto the front tail below the manufacturer's tag. Player name is sewn inside the back of the collar.

© GameWornGuides.com

1971 Home

Tim Stephan Collection

Click here for a link to the actual Letter of Opinion

The White Sox change uniform designs again in 1971, revising their home colors to red and white. Wilson makes the zippered-front home uniforms in white/red pinstriped flannel, and all trim is eliminated. The “Sox” logo changes to red twill outlined in white, as do the player numbers on both front and back. Player numbers adopt Wilson’s standard Varsity font, used by many other teams. Names on back are eliminated, and back numbers are now 9” tall. The 1971 flannels are a rare one-year style and are seldom found today. Most surviving examples were reused in Spring Training or the minor leagues and often had their numbers—and sometimes team crests—stripped off and replaced..

© GameWornGuides.com

1971 Road

The 1971 road jersey is a further evolution of the basic design adopted by the White Sox in 1967, though it had been altered in some way nearly every year since. The fabric is a pale blue flannel, brighter than 1969's hue. Zipper-front, it has red/white/red narrow knit trim around the collar and on the sleeve ends. Twill two-color numbers are now Wilson Varsity and are 9" tall. Player names are eliminated. Front numbers move to the left sleeve. Year and set designations are chain stitched directly to the front tail of the garment. Player name is embroidered on a swatch of matching fabric and sewn inside the collar. 1971 sees the Chicago script rendered in red twill with white outline. "White Sox" is sewn in small twill letters on the tail of the underline. The 1971 road flannels are a rare one-year style and are seldom found today.

Above: 1971 uniform introduction (The Sporting News)

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1975 Home

1972

Click here for a link to the actual Letter of Opinion

Derek Teets Collection

1973

Click here for a link to the actual Letter of Opinion

1972 marks the first year of double knits for the White Sox. The team may have begun wearing these jerseys late in the 1971 season, making an early switch from the old flannels. Unlike other MLB teams—most of whom used the fabric transition as an opportunity to revise their uniforms—the White Sox's first knits are virtually identical to the flannels they replaced. Two-color red/white numbers on front and back. Back numbers are extra tall. No names on the back. Zipper front.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1975 Road

1972

The switch to double knits in 1972 is uneventful, as the flannel uniform design from that year is left unchanged. Zipper-front, two-color large Varsity standard numbers on left sleeve and on back, red/white. Back numbers are extra tall, and no player name is used. Narrow sewn-on knit trim adorns collar and sleeve ends.

Note the chain stitching on the wordmark, a detail typically absent on restored jerseys.

1974

The tiny "White Sox" lettering on the tail of the underline is chain stitched onto the twill.

1973

© GameWornGuides.com

1976-1981 Home

Rawlings 1976-1978

Tim Stephan Collection

Game jerseys are made of solid white fabric with old-fashioned blue collars that, to many, resembled a mid-1970s leisure suit. They also featured ornate navy lettering in a style reminiscent of the early 1900s. Sometimes called the first true "throwback" uniform, the design was reportedly inspired and championed by team owner Bill Veeck's wife. Game jerseys are made of solid white fabric with old-fashioned blue collars that, to many, resembled a mid-1970s leisure suit. They also featured ornate navy lettering in a style reminiscent of the early 1900s. Sometimes called the first true "throwback" uniform, the design was reportedly inspired and championed by team owner Bill Veeck's wife. Although originally meant to evoke nostalgia, the jersey has become more associated with the cultural aesthetics of the time in which it was worn. Nicknames include "Softball Style," "Disco Era," "Leisure Suit," and "Pajama Style." This oft-maligned uniform introduced a stylized, pseudo-turn-of-the-century font for both names and numbers. It also marked the first use of a custom font for player names.

In earlier editions of the Guide, we had named Rawlings as the sole supplier of this style 1976–1978 and as a co-supplier along with Capital Ace 1979–1981. We have amended that conclusion with this edition, and have determined that Rawlings jerseys used 1979–1981 were most likely leftovers or re-issues from the earlier period. This is true for the blue road jerseys as well.

1976

These jerseys were issued and reissued by the White Sox at both the major and minor league levels. Many featured changes to the back numbers and names, or had white fabric panels sewn over the original lettering and numerals. Over time, the blue twill lettering often faded or bleached to a purplish-white hue (bottom left). The player name lettering on the back was ornate and wildly inconsistent—appearing almost as if each name had been individually hand-drawn and cut. The numbers, and especially the NOB letters, varied in size, width, weight, and serif style. In all likelihood, several sets of manually created patterns were used, each developed before the advent of modern graphics technology that we have come to accept as "normal" today.

© GameWornGuides.com

1976-1981 Home, continued: Capital Ace 1979-1981

Capital Ace of Japan took over as the supplier for 1979-1981. While the design remained unchanged, the fabric was slightly more sheer, and the back lettering fonts became more consistent across the board. The twill used for the lettering had a silkier, satin-like appearance, and the edges were bound to the jersey with a tight satin embroidery stitch—similar to what is often seen in Japan League uniforms.

Over time, nearly all of these jerseys have shrunk significantly from repeated washings, particularly the Capital Ace examples. As a result, surviving specimens are often as much as three sizes smaller than their original labeled size.

1979

Above: Look closely and you'll notice the Garr jersey is actually a mesh batting practice jersey, visually identical to the solid fabric game version. Some players wore these in hot weather for added comfort. The same applied for the road jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

1976-1981 Road

Rawlings 1976-1978

1978

The blue road jerseys were made by Rawlings 1976–1978, and by Japanese manufacturer Capital Ace 1979–1981. Designed to be worn untucked, they appeared casual to some, but sloppy-looking to many. The lettering used a silky twill material that differed from standard tackle twill, and was applied to the jersey using a tight satin stitch.

Rawlings versions were a true navy blue, while later Capital Ace examples were sometimes a noticeably brighter shade. In actual use, these jerseys often shrank significantly from repeated washings over the years, with surviving examples sometimes measuring as much as three sizes smaller than their original tagged size. I have owned several.

© GameWornGuides.com

1976-1981 Road, continued: Capital Ace 1979-1981

Note the correct method of sewing on the letters and numbers—these use a satiny-silky twill that are fully bound to the garment by an embroidery "satin stitch." This stitch is commonly seen on Japan League baseball jerseys. Capital Ace jerseys are sewn in Japan.

Capital Ace of Japan became the team's uniform supplier in 1979. Their jerseys featured silky twill lettering applied with a tight machine satin-stitch embroidery. The fonts used were more precise than those on the earlier Rawlings versions, with the Japanese manufacturer developing both standard and condensed NOB styles—examples of which are visible here.

Some jerseys are year-tagged, while others are not. The fabric color varies as well; some appear in a lighter, brighter blue than typical navy. Nearly all surviving examples have shrunk significantly from their original size, suggesting that the material was not made from the standard, durable fabrics typically used in MLB jerseys of the era.

Bill Henderson Collection

© GameWornGuides.com

White Sox “Mix and Match” 1976-1981

While fans often credit the 1977 Pirates with introducing “Mix-and-Match” uniform sets, the A’s (1972), Indians (1974), and White Sox (1976), had adopted the concept first. Shown here are the five mix-and-match combinations worn by the White Sox between 1976 and 1981. The infamous short pants were worn only a handful of times, in 1976—but left a lasting impression. Players wore special padded hose to offer minimal protection during slides.

© GameWornGuides.com

White Sox Jerseys Reused in Spring Training/ Demoted to the Minor Leagues

Like all other teams, the White Sox routinely sent their used uniforms to the minors once their MLB service had ended. When a jersey featured a city name on the front, it was typically stripped of all identifiers—front crest, back number, and name—before reuse. Shown here are several examples of White Sox jerseys that have undergone such alterations, including replacement crests, number cover-ups, and NOB changes. Nearly all of the pre-1990 White Sox jerseys in the hobby have been restored in some way, including the one above (top right) that is a terrible example of a "restoration"

© GameWornGuides.com

Late 1977 Re-Lettered MLB Jersey to Minors

The practice of passing down used uniforms to minor league affiliates is nearly as old as organized baseball itself. Shown here is a 1977 White Sox road jersey that was re-lettered and sent to the Knoxville Sox, the team's Double-A affiliate. A collector later restored the name on the back to match number 32—worn in 1977 by Steve Stone—while leaving the minor league front lettering intact.

Robert Harris Collection

In a happy next chapter to this story, the collector who owns this very jersey sent it to me to restore, and I did. I blasted the screened-on wordmark off the front, revealing a badly damaged jersey body, perforated with holes from the rough removal of the front lettering and overuse. Much, much work later, involving cleaning, cutting and stitching, it is back to the way it was worn by Stone in 1977. Click here to see a video of the action.

I have never seen a Rawlings tag this worn out.

© GameWornGuides.com

1982-1986 Home

1986

1986

The White Sox debut a bold new look, one that—for the first time in MLB—fully takes advantage of the pullover jersey's uninterrupted solid front, undivided by buttons. Knit stripes are woven directly into the fabric, not sewn on.

Lettering is one-color navy in Sand-Knit's Varsity font. Player names appear in Sand-Knit's Block font, with steep arches and no nameplates used. Strip tagging is located inside the back tail.

© GameWornGuides.com

1982-1986 Road

1985

Bill Henderson Collection

1985

1985

Same as the home jersey, but with the body crafted in gray cloth. Knit stripes are sewn in, not sewn on. Lettering is one-color navy in Sand-Knit's Varsity font. Player names are heavily arched, using Sand-Knit's Block font. No nameplates are used.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-1990 Home

A sudden return to a totally traditional look after a decade of wild fashions. Solid white body, traditional button front, White Sox script with underline is navy/red. Numbers only on back, no names. Block style numbers, two-color navy/red. Player numbers also appear on the left pants leg. The Rawlings script logo is present on the right sleeve in all years.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-1990 Road

1989

1990

A classic style returns, featuring “Chicago” in navy cursive script outlined in red across the chest. The jersey has a solid gray button-front body with no trim. There are no front numbers; instead, player numbers appear at the top of the pants.

No names on the back 1987–1989. Block style names added in 1990 only. Block two color numbers, navy/red. The Rawlings script logo is embroidered at the end of the right sleeve in all years.

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-2023 Home

(Previewed On-Field September 1990)

September 1990: No sleeve patches, 1990–1991 jerseys made by Rawlings.

1992 only: diamond-shaped sleeve memorial only. Russell alone makes 1992 jerseys.

1991

1993–2001

Originally intended for debut in 1991, this new (but retro-inspired) jersey was rolled out early for the White Sox's final home series at old Comiskey Park, September 28–30, 1990. The design recalled the "Go-Go Sox" teams of the late 1950s, widely remembered by fans as the club's glory years.

A commemorative Comiskey Park patch is added in 1991 and remains in use through 2002. The patch is removed after the stadium is renamed on January 1, 2003.

No names on back until 1997. Two-color numbers and names, Block Style black/silver gray. 1990–1992 the silver is a darker shade; beginning in 1993, a lighter silver with a bluish tint—known as Webster "Pro Silver"—is introduced. Note the correct placement of the front number. on the lower left chest.

1991

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-2023 Home, continued

1993–1999, both Russell and Wilson make sets of home jerseys for the White Sox each season. When worn on field, Russell-made jerseys have the company's "R" logo on the right sleeve, while Wilson jerseys—due to contractual terms—do not show any manufacturer's logo. Otherwise, the two versions are identical in design and construction. After reviewing hundreds of game photos, it's clear that players regularly wore both brands interchangeably—even within the same game.

Above: Frank Thomas in 1994 wearing Wilson (left, no sleeve logo) and Russell (right, visible sleeve logo).

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-2023 Home, continued

2001

2003

2004

2005 World Series Issue
The jersey fabric of White Sox pinstriped home jerseys in the early 2000s is a lightweight, wider-weave double knit that differs from those used by other teams. See detail in Frank Thomas LOA (left) for a closer look.

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-2023 Home, continued

2012

2013

2021

With their standard home uniform unchanged since 1991, the White Sox now rank among the most design-stable teams in MLB—an unlikely outcome given their turbulent uniform history prior to that point.

Top left: Full-weight knit jersey.

Top right: Lighter Cool Base model, with underarm panels and updated tagging.

Bottom: Nike 2021 Flex Base jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-2023 Road

1991

1992

The 1991 road jersey features a restrained “Chicago” script; front and back Block numbers and player name, all in black outlined with white. The only ornamentation is the black and white knit sleeve end trim. Two-color Block numbers – Black/white on front and back. Two-color Block names, no nameplates used. Multiple sets were produced by different manufacturers across several seasons.

1993

1994

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-2023 Road, continued

1997

2011

While nearly every other MLB team wore the Jackie Robinson “Breaking Barriers” patch on their 1997 jerseys, the White Sox substituted a Nelly Fox memorial patch instead. It was worn on the right sleeve of both the road gray and alternate black jerseys.

Above: Gray bordered patch worn 1991– 2000. Black edged patch used on Majestic jerseys 2001–2010.

Left: This style sleeve patch used 2011 –2023

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-2023 Road, continued

2018

2020

Note the change in style code from RXR2 for Majestic to RX22 for Nike.

© GameWornGuides.com

1991 Alternate

A black button-front alternate jersey with white buttons was introduced in 1991. The first version features plain sleeve ends and two-color (white/gray) for all lettering, names and numbers. This version is used one year only. The gray tone used in 1991 is distinct—darker than in later years—and corresponds to Webster “Silver Gray” #PP22.

All game-worn versions of this jersey should display the Comiskey Park Inaugural patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992 Alternate

New-for-1992 version uses a two-color "Sox" logo on the front, white/gray outline. This style also lasts only one year before being replaced. The color of the gray fabric changes to a lighter shade (Webster Pro Silver PP32) Names and numbers exactly follow the same rules as the front Sox logo. Numbers on front and back, name on back with no nameplate. Type-style is Rawlings Block. Unlike retail versions, team-issued 1992 jerseys do not feature the diamond-sock patch on the left sleeve. Instead, as a memorial to two White Sox staff members who passed away that year, a small gray embroidered diamond is used (see inset). At one point in the early 1990s, the retail market was flooded with these jerseys. This may have resulted from the team unexpectedly switching to a new design (see next page) mid-cycle, leaving the manufacturer with a surplus of obsolete inventory.

Above: Replica lettered 1992 jersey; note this retail, 1992-only wordmark version uses the diamond/sock logo on its sleeve. Card at right shows the game worn version with the tiny gray memorial diamond instead.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993-1998, 2008-2011 Alternate/ 1999-2007, 2012-2023 Alternate Black

Bill Henderson Collection

By 1993, it seems they finally got it the way they wanted it, and stick with it for the next 30+ years. Notice, now with three-color Sox lettering, white/black/gray. Block names and numbers follow the same rules exactly. Three-color numbers sewn on both front and back. Note the correct placement of the front number: aligned with the bottom of the "SOX" crest. Over the years, the White Sox have favored this jersey more than any other, frequently wearing it at home and on the road

Above: Both of these jerseys are from 1994, top is made by Wilson, bottom is Russell. By contract, only the Russell jersey can display a manufacturer's sleeve logo.

Above: 1997 Black Alt jersey features the Nellie Fox Memorial Patch on the right sleeve in place of the Jackie Robinson patch that was worn by most other teams on all jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993-1998, 2008-2011 Alternate/1999-2007, 2012-2023 Alternate Black, continued

2003

2014

The three-color name on back is sewn directly to the jersey. When player names exceed eight letters (give or take), a condensed version of the font is used so the name fits within the space.

2010

2000

2021

Starting with the 2016 switch to lightweight Flex Base construction, all lettering transitions to a “kiss-cut” application, altering the traditional layering scheme. In this format, the black outline layer is sewn on top, while the white and silver layers are stitched beneath. This technique eliminates a full layer of material, resulting in thinner, more flexible lettering throughout the jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999-2001, 2005-2007 Alternate Home Vest

1999 (Wilson)

2000

These tags are all from game worn White Sox vests. The Sox used both Wilson and Russell for their team jerseys, 1993–1999.

1999 (Russell)

From 1999–2001, and then again 2005–2007, the White Sox vest jersey was issued as a true sleeveless jersey worn over a black undershirt. Team patches were sewn onto the undershirt sleeves.

Only the 1999 Russell vests feature the Russell "R" logo embroidered on the back of the neck. From 2001 onward, the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo replaces it. Wilson-made 1999 vests have no visible manufacturer's logo. 2001 and later have the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch. Wilson-made 1999 vests have no visible manufacturer's logo. Lettered identically to home jersey, two-color black/gray.

Majestic-made vests from 2001 onward were originally manufactured without any logo—since branding was intended to appear on the undershirt instead. Beginning in 2005, the Majestic logo was embroidered directly onto the vest itself, placed at the top of the left shoulder just above the armhole.

© GameWornGuides.com

2001 Alternate Home “1917”

The original model for this nostalgia jersey was created specifically for the 1917 World Series—the White Sox did not wear this design during the 1917 regular season! At the time, the team introduced the uniform without league approval, angering many who viewed the move as arrogant.

This modern throwback version was worn only during Sunday home games in the 2001 season. It features numbers on the back only, in Red Sox-style two-color navy/red. No names on the back. (Note: the 1917 originals had no numbers at all.)

The American League 100th Anniversary patch (2001) should always appear on the sleeve of this one-year-only jersey. These Sunday throwbacks were worn at least once after the 9/11 attacks, so it is also correct for them to feature an American flag patch above the back numbers on those occasions.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002-2004 Alternate Home Faux Vest

In 2002, the vest jersey is replaced by a faux vest design. The new version features a white pinstriped body with permanently attached black poly-knit sleeves. This change addresses longstanding clubhouse issues, particularly the difficulty of getting all players to wear matching undershirts—especially when commemorative patches are involved or when manufacturers have paid for branding to appear on sleeve fabric. The faux vest design eliminates these inconsistencies.

Lettered identically to home jersey, two-color Block names and numbers black/gray. No nameplates used. The 2003 version includes the All-Star Game patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Alternate Home “1906”

This jersey was intended for Sunday home games but was rarely worn. It is a near replica of the White Sox’s 1906 home uniform, created to commemorate its 100th anniversary. The primary difference is the absence of the original wide collar.

While authentic 1906 uniforms did not feature player numbers, the White Sox updated the design for modern use by adding numbers to the back. Uniquely, they chose to use the “Wild West” number font from their 1976–1981 pajama-style uniforms—a nod to their own eccentric uniform history.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Alternate Home “1972”

Steve Kraljic Collection

The full story behind these uniforms appears in the sidebar at right. The back numbers are noticeably HUGE—possibly even slightly larger than those on the original 1972 uniforms they replicate.

These are beautiful copies of the originals, right down to the sleeve patch detail. Majestic executed the design with great care, producing one of the most faithful nostalgia uniforms in recent years.

White Sox Press Release
01/25/2012 10:28 PM EST

White Sox to Wear 1972 Throwback Uniforms in 2012

Team Will Wear Popular Red Caps and Pinstripe Jerseys During Sunday Home Games

CHICAGO – The Chicago White Sox will wear 1972 throwback uniforms during Sunday home games in 2012. The uniforms will feature the red pinstriped jersey with the iconic “Sox” script over the chest, red numbers (front and back) and a Sox patch on the sleeve, along with the popular red cap with its unique variation of the Sox script. The White Sox will wear the throwback uniforms on 13 Sundays this season, starting with April 15 vs. Detroit. The unique red caps and pinstripe jerseys were worn 40 years ago by a White Sox team led by the late legendary manager Chuck Tanner, and stars such as Dick Allen, Terry Forster, Rich “Goose” Gossage, Carlos May, Bill Melton, Jorge Orta and Wilbur Wood. Along with winning the American League Most Valuable Player Award in 1972, Allen led the league in home runs (37), RBI (113), walks (99), on-base percentage (.420) and slugging percentage (.603). Wood led the league in wins (24), innings pitched (376.2) and games started (49) in 1972.

“Being a part of those early 1970s White Sox teams, with a leader like Chuck Tanner and exciting players such as Dick Allen, Wilbur Wood and a young Goose Gossage, remains one of the fondest times in my career,” said former Sox slugger Bill Melton. “The red pinstripes and red baseball cap will bring back a lot of great memories for Sox fans from that generation.”

© GameWornGuides.com

2013-2023 Alternate Home “1983”

Above: 2016-2019 tagging top, 2020-2023 tagging bottom

Left*: The 2016 version of the jersey (bottom) has slightly tighter spacing between the letters S-O-X.*

The Chicago Tribune noted (1/18/13): “In another step toward honoring their glory years, the Chicago White Sox will wear replicas of their 1983 uniforms for Sunday home games in 2013.

This marks the 30th anniversary of the Sox's ‘Winning Ugly’ team that won the American League West title before losing to eventual World Series champion Baltimore in the AL Championship Series.”

The White Sox admit that merchandising is a driver behind their nostalgia uniforms, and say that fan response, and correspondingly sales, have been good. These copies by Majestic are better than excellent—even using the correct and obscure Sand-Knit fonts for Varsity player number and player name on back, that to the detail obsessed, do indeed differ from their modern equivalents. Similar uniforms have been worn in singular Turn Back the Clock games in 2003 and 2008, though those were not as perfectly correct in detail as these are. Not tag code changes from Majestic’s RXA3 to Nike’s RX33 in 2020.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of old.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021-2023 City Connect

The White Sox entry in the City Connect series leans heavily into their familiar uniform styles, with some new additions that are meant to evoke Chicago. Though they appear black, the jerseys are described by Nike as “dark gray” and they contain gray pinstripes and a subtle texture pattern that MLB.com said “draws inspiration from Chicago’s well-known Greystone architectural style.” The front of the jersey reads “Southside”—a reference to the part of town in which the White Sox play—in white/gray in the team’s Gothic font. Front and back numbers, also white/gray, are a custom style that also builds on the Gothic lettering style. Player names are in gray on back. The sleeve ends feature gray/white trim, and the left sleeve has the white sock on a black diamond patch, both of which derive from the team’s black alternate jersey. “Chicago” is embroidered above the Nike jock tag in the same font at the team’s road jerseys. In 2021, the Meryl Reinsdorf memorial patch is worn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly - a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the White Sox longstanding home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and front and back numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but this style has no text that crosses the placket, so there's no apparent change as a result. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Road

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the White Sox longstanding road jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and front and back numbers, making them smaller and standardized, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the "Chicago" script bow breaks across the second "C" rather than between the "I" and "C" as before. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the sleeves rather than sewn on to them, but the White Sox used sewn-in trim on these jerseys already. The switch often makes trim appear wider for other teams, but the trim on this jersey was very wide before, and looks narrower now. It is unclear if the team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024, more research is required. Another perplexing note, the 2024 MLB Style Guide noted another change to this jersey, listed as "Slight manufacturing modification to road lettering." This refers to the "Chicago" script, because the changes to player names and numbers were called out separately. We cannot discern any change in the lettering from before, aside from the new breaking point across the smaller placket. However, this same change occurred for many other teams and was not called out in the Style Guide, so it is unclear what this entry meant, or if the change it describes even happened at all.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Home “1983”

The White Sox throwback home alternate jersey was listed in the MLB Style Guide in 2024, which included graphics that showed VPE changes like a notched V-neck, smaller/standardized player name on back, and a lower MLB logo on the back collar. Despite this, the team never wore this style on-field in 2024. It is unclear if any were made for use, but given all of Nike’s challenges with supplying uniforms in 2024, it may have been scrapped by either the team or manufacturer. We list it here for reference because, at least on paper, it was an official alternate for the 2024 season. It is, however, deleted after the 2024 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Black

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the White Sox longstanding black "Sox"alternate jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and all numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn in to the sleeves rather than sewn on to them, but the White Sox used sewn-in trim on these jerseys already. The switch often makes trim appear wider for other teams, but the trim on this jersey was very wide before, and looks narrower now. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but this style has no text that crosses the placket, so there's no apparent change as a result. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 City Connect/2025 Alternate Black “Southside”

2024

The switch to Nike’s Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the White Sox popular “Southside” City Connect jersey. On many jerseys, the most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and front and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. For this style, the player name lettering does arch more than before, and font itself is slightly different, even if the size seems equivalent to the earlier version. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the “Southside” lettering seems to break in about the same place as before. One positive update to this and other pinstriped jerseys is that VPE does not have the mesh side and back tail panels of Flex Base, which would interrupt the pinstripe pattern. With VPE, the pinstripes carry across the entire jersey. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. It is moved to a full-time alternate in the MLB Style Guide for 2025.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes and font styles, and perforated numbers are gone. Overall, except for the lower MLB logo on the back of the jersey, these look very close to the 2023 version, minus the Flex Base side panels. Starting July 11, the team added a memorial patch for Bobby Jenks.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Also, unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. However, the White Sox used sewn-in trim for these jerseys for many years before VPE (and in 2024), but with the new “correction” to road jerseys, the trim appears to switch to sewn-on for the first time. It looks even narrower than in 2024, which itself had been narrower than before VPE. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. Starting July 11, the team added a memorial patch for Bobby Jenks.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Black “Sox”

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams’ non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers revert, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes and font styles, and perforated numbers are gone. Overall, except for the lower MLB logo on the back of the jersey, these look very close to the 2023 version, minus the Flex Base side panels. Starting July 11, the team added a memorial patch for Bobby Jenks.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 City Connect 2.0

The White Sox City Connect 2.0 entry is less an homage to their town and more a mashup with their NBA brethren ("coincidentally" owned by the same family) the Bulls. Here's how the team described the look when it was released:

- "CHICAGO" Wordmark: The uniform features the Bulls letters across the chest, echoing the iconic White Sox wordmarks of the 1930s and serving as a powerful declaration of city pride.
- Winged Sock: The newly designed winged sock draws inspiration from the iconic White Sox era of the 1950s.
- Crossover (Jock) Tag: A crossover uniting the NBA and MLB, this co-branded tag symbolizes the convergence of court and field.
- "SOUTHSIDE": As a nod to the initial White Sox City Connect Jersey, "SOUTHSIDE" is etched around the sleeve and down the pant leg.
- Neckline Detail: The neckline features the teams' combined nine championships.

It is certainly a first among City Connect jerseys, and the Bulls did have an amazing run decades before this jersey came to be. However, the timing (long after either team has won a title) and the very spot-on references to the Jordan-era Bulls make this jersey, though attractive, seem like a blatant form of nostalgia-fueled money-grab, an exercise in crossover merch meant to sell at retail above all else. Starting July 11, the team added a memorial patch for Bobby Jenks.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2003 White Sox Team Tagging

During the 1990s, the White Sox are one of only a few teams that sourced multiple sets of uniforms using multiple vendors. By 2001, they had settled on Majestic as their sole supplier.

© GameWornGuides.com

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1971 Spring Training

White mesh jersey with red “SOX” lettering on the left chest, and unusually tall, narrow Varsity-style numbers on the back. No names are used. On the original garments, both the team lettering and back numbers are screen-printed rather than sewn. Remember, in 1971 when these first appeared, the team was still wearing flannels at game time! When Mitchell & Ness later reproduced the design for retail, they chose to sew on the lettering and numbers instead of screen-printing them. The company believed the authentic screened application would appear visually cheap and, ironically, less “authentic” to buyers—making it harder to sell!

Update: Collector Mark Fletcher has offered this information on these unique jerseys: “Here is the story on the first White Sox BP jersey. They were in an auction from either a New York or Philly area auction that was in Sports Collectors Digest (SCD) in the early 1990’s. I did bid on them, but I wasn’t sure if they were really worn by White Sox or another league and team. I ended up buying the Bill Melton jersey which was signed by Bill. Months later, I showed Bill the photo of the jersey and he didn’t recall wearing that jersey though it showed lots of use. I wrote to Ed Herrmann and Chuck Tanner and they both confirmed they did wear them.

Chuck Greenwood’s SCD column from Sept. 20, 1996 with the help of Dave Miedema (we) got the answer from Chuck Tanner who also told me the same thing. The 1971 season the White Sox were changing the team colors to red. They wanted to promote the new colors without breaking out the new uniforms for spring training. Chuck goes on says they hurried up and contacted Russell to make these jersey’s. They were heavier mesh due to they were cheaper. I don’t remember seeing a Russell tag on jersey or screened. I will have to pull it out when I get a chance. So they were worn for Spring Training (games) in 1971 only. ”

© GameWornGuides.com

1976-1981 Home Batting Practice/Game Jersey

1976-1978 made by Rawlings, 1979-1981 made by Capital Ace, same as the game jerseys for those years.

Rawlings example, 1976-1978

These jerseys are exact duplicates of the team's home game uniforms from the period, but constructed in mesh fabric. While referred to here as "batting practice jerseys," many White Sox collectors say they were worn by some players during hot-weather games.

They feature the same ornate font for names and numbers, sewn directly onto the back. Nameplates were usually not used, though some examples (left)—do display them. This could be the result of an improper restoration, a repair to cover damage, or, in some cases, an original team-issued variation.

© GameWornGuides.com

1976-1981 Road Batting Practice/Game Jersey

Exact duplicates of the team's road game jerseys from the era, but made of navy mesh fabric. While referred to here as "batting practice jerseys," many White Sox collectors say they were also intended for use during hot-weather games.

They feature the same ornate font for names and numbers, sewn directly onto the back with no nameplates. Top left: Game worn example made by Rawlings. Bottom left: made by Capital Ace of Japan.

© GameWornGuides.com

1980-1981 Batting Practice

White mesh jersey with blue shoulder stripes and sleeve-end trim. The Sox batting man logo on the front is clearly heat-pressed or screen-printed, not sewn, as are the back numbers.

These baseball cards are from 1981 but use images taken during the 1980 season. The Tony La Russa card appears to show a regular season game, as Comiskey Park's seating and scoreboard are visible in the background.

© GameWornGuides.com

1982 Batting Practice

This non-mesh red batting practice jersey was worn in 1982. It is thin, slightly heavier than a t-shirt. Both the front logo and the back numbers are heat-pressed on. The example at left is very likely not game worn, but it is team issue. Recall that very few team-spec items were marketed to the public in 1982 by Major League Baseball. It simply was not done.

Above: Note the original "Designed and Tailored Exclusively for the Chicago White Sox by Sand-Knit" tag sewn on the outside tail. Right: For comparison, a non-team issued tag on a retail sale model .

© GameWornGuides.com

1982-1986 Home Batting Practice

Left: Obviously also worn in 1987 Spring Training. On the Topps card, player is wearing a new-for 1987 cap.

- The White Sox wore both blue and red batting practice jerseys during this period. These are of mesh construction. I have seen these style jerseys made by Majestic, Sand-Knit and Roman Sport.
- Sand-Knit versions have red/white/blue knit V-neck and sleeve trim. Majestic and Roman Sport versions have shoulder-top red/white/blue racing stripe trim.
- No NOB, Varsity numbers are two-color tackle twill, white/navy.
- Notice the difference in the front lettering between the Sand-Knit (open inside of "o") and Roman Sport and Majestic jerseys (solid blue inside of "O").

Above: Notice that on this player-worn jersey, the numeral 1 is not Varsity Standard… as the character has a curved line at the top. Looks like yet another variation, one I have not yet cataloged.

Above: Majestic.. Left: Roman Sport. Both share a similar front wordmark.

© GameWornGuides.com

1982-1986 Road Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

- This is the navy blue version of the Sox batting practice jersey. This example is made by Majestic.
- No NOB, Majestic Varsity numbers are two-color tackle twill, red and white
- Sewn-in white/red/white knit racing stripes adorn the shoulder tops.

© GameWornGuides.com

Mid-1980s Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

Bill Henderson Collection

- No names on back, Bold, two-color (red/white) Varsity style numbers. The SOX batting man logo is embroidered on a backing patch, then sewn onto the garment.
- Note the collar and waistband trim variations seen in the examples at top left and left.
- Exact usage years are uncertain, but photographic evidence confirms these jerseys were worn in 1985–1986, and possibly beyond.
- These garments are tightly cut and extremely short. The game-worn example shown is labeled XL but fits closer to a medium. The elastic waistband causes the jersey to ride up noticeably whenever the wearer lifts their arms. While likely uncomfortable for players, the design is unmistakably “80s” in style..

© GameWornGuides.com

1982-1984 Knit Sweater

This team-issued snap-front sweater might qualify as a jacket rather than a jersey, but since the White Sox also had distinct jackets during this era, it is included here as a separate item.

It features “Exclusive Sand-Knit” tagging and a player name/number strip tag—matching the format used on game jerseys of the period. Notably, the player tag lacks a year designation, unlike jersey tags from the same time. This may suggest the garment was intended for multi-season use rather than issued annually.

The specific style of Sand-Knit tag identifies this garment as being manufactured between 1982 and early 1984.

© GameWornGuides.com

1983 Spring Training

This photo from 1983 Spring Training shows a mesh jersey that is similar but not identical to the one worn in 1981 a few pages prior. While we don't have the benefit of a color photo, it is a good guess that the shoulder stripes on the outside are red with a wider blue stripe between them in the center. The V-neck trim is red, and the screen-printed logo is likely blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-1990 Home Batting Practice

During this period, the team uses both red and navy blue mesh batting practice jerseys—red for home games and navy for the road.

Numbers on the back are a bold or extra bold Block font. No names on back.

Bill Henderson Collection

Photo courtesy Jerry Reuss

© GameWornGuides.com

1987-1988 Road Batting Practice

- This version says White Sox with an underline.
- Numbers on the back are a single-color white block extra-bold font. No names used on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

1989-1990 Road Batting Practice

Bill Henderson Collection

- This version says Chicago with no underline.
- The front wordmark varies by manufacturer—Rawlings versions use a lighter-stroke design, while Majestic versions appear bolder.
- Numbers on the back are a single-color white Block extra-bold font. No names used on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-1992 Batting Practice

- Mesh V-neck pullover with two-color team logo lettering, made by Russell.
- No names on back
- Numbers are also two-color, Block style, white and gray.
- The 1991 version was produced by Wilson; the 1992 version by Russell.

© GameWornGuides.com

Early 1990s-2006 Alternate Batting Practice

In period news photos, the White Sox are frequently seen wearing this non-standard batting practice jersey during warm-ups from the early-to-mid 1990s through at least 2004. Made by Majestic, it is a black mesh jersey featuring distinctive knit trim on the sleeves, collar, and waistband, with a short front zipper and elastic at the waist.

The sleeves are striped in white, gray, and black, and the front displays the Sox lettering in a three-color design. Most notably, the jersey includes large gray mesh inserts at the junction where the sleeves meet the body. On game-worn versions, a small patch reading “Chicago White Sox” in simple print is sewn onto the left sleeve.

Although not part of the official uniform catalog, this style was worn regularly by players and coaches on the field over many seasons.

© GameWornGuides.com

1991-1992 Alternate Batting Practice #2

Majestic supplied this pullover, elastic-waist batting practice jersey style to many teams in the early 1990s. Made of mesh, these jerseys feature multi-stripe trim, front slash pockets, and a short zipper at the neck.

On the examples shown, the top jersey uses block-style back numbers, while the bottom features Majestic Varsity number font—indicating that the latter was most likely factory-lettered by Majestic. This style includes two-color front lettering, a detail consistent with White Sox BP jerseys from 1991–1992 only.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993-2002 Batting Practice

Mesh V-neck pullover by Russell (early) or Majestic (later). Identify by three-color "SOX" lettering on front. Block numbers in three-color white/black/gray replaces 1992's two-color lettering. No names on back.

Above: Later jerseys made by Majestic.

Left: Only 2000–2002 had MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on back of neck.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2006 Batting Practice

Fabric is updated to an early moisture-wicking, non-mesh tech material. The jersey features a button-front design with underarm gussets made from a slightly different fabric type.

These jerseys are highly susceptible to fabric pulls and color fading, often turning brown with sun exposure and repeated washing. No name appears on back. Numbers are rendered in block font, three-color white/black/gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 Batting Practice

New for 2007, this Majestic Cool Base batting practice jersey features a one-button neck and uses heat-applied appliqués for both lettering and numbers, replacing traditional sewn tack-le twill. Small contrasting gray fabric inserts are sewn under the arm. Numbers are white/gray, no names on back used. Front lettering is three-color design, similar in appearance to the style used starting in 1993.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Batting Practice

The 2011–2013 version of the batting practice jersey transitions from the previous one-button pullover to a full button-front design. This change was mandated league-wide, with all teams adopting button-front styles beginning in 2011.

Made from Cool Base fabric, this version introduces full gray side panels, replacing the smaller gray underarm inserts used from 2007–2010. Back numbers are white twill outlined in gray. No player names are used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Alternate “1972” Batting Practice

This red Cool Base batting practice jersey was introduced in 2012 to accompany the White Sox’s Sunday home “1972 throwback” uniforms. While not a reproduction of the team’s original 1971 spring training jersey, the “fauxback” nods to the era. The original 1971 white mesh tops are widely recognized as the first team-issued warm-up jerseys in MLB history, although were not worn again after that spring training year.

These red jerseys were likely worn only before Sunday home games in 2012, and many were also marketed to fans seeking a unique and memorable alternate style. White twill numbers are featured on the back. No names are used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Alternate “1983” Batting Practice

This nostalgia-themed batting practice jersey was introduced to accompany the White Sox’s 2013 alternate “1983” Sunday home uniforms. It was likely worn only prior to those games. Made of Cool Base fabric in contrasting red and dark blue, it features the White Sox’s stylized swinging batting man logo from the 1983 era on the left chest. Names and numbers on the back are in white twill.

This jersey is not a reproduction of an actual BP style worn in the 1980s, but rather a modern reinterpretation designed for marketing appeal. It proved popular with fans despite not being historically authentic.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Batting Practice

Except for minor trim updates, the 2014 batting practice jersey is nearly identical to the 2011–2013 version. White side panels are slightly smaller, and black-and-white knit trim is added to the sleeve openings and neck.

The back number is white twill outlined in gray. The front team logo uses a three-color scheme: white/black/gray. No player names appear on the back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Alternate “1983” Batting Practice

This one has proven difficult to track down. Announced by the White Sox as part of their 2014 uniform collection, it follows the updated construction used in Majestic’s 2014 batting practice jersey line. It features red/blue knit trim at the sleeve ends and collar. The red side panels are smaller than in previous versions, and the red detailing around the back of the neck—present in 2013—is no longer included.

Despite extensive searching, no confirmed photographs of the jersey being worn on-field have been found. As this style would have been worn only during pre-game warm-ups on throwback 1983 uniform days, media photos of them have been elusive.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the pre-season. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The White Sox use a design separate from their regular season standard set, combining their regular season 1980s batting man logo with their regular season current color scheme as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey also features a rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the White Sox spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The White Sox use the same jersey from Spring 2016; a design separate from their regular season standard set combining their nostalgic 1980's batterman logo with their current black-white-gray color scheme as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill.

While most other teams simplified their back numbers to one-color on the new-for-2017 MLB Spring Training template, the White Sox did not need to simplify as they were using one-color only already. The 2017 jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing where the White Sox spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice

Left: This example features an up-side-down "8" on the sleeve. A little surprising given the stark difference in the sizes of the top and bottom openings of the number.*

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls "lightweight twill" (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The White Sox jersey is black with gray back and underarm gussets. The stylized "Sox" logo from their home jerseys and caps appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank gray. Player number in white/gray Block on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Alternate “1983” Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. As has been their style since 2012, the White Sox use a matching BP top when they wear their “1983” nostalgia game jerseys. The version is blue with red back and underarm gussets. The 80’s inspired batting man logo appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in white Block on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The White Sox use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, combining their 1980s batting man logo with their current color scheme as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The White Sox use their a design separate from their regular-season standard set, combining their 1980s batting man logo with their current color scheme, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "ARZ," referencing their Spring Training home. The name and front and back numbers are white/black/gray twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020–2023, the White Sox use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, combining their 1980s batting man logo with their current color scheme, with white/black/gray player name and front and back numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

Special Events Jerseys

1990 Turn Back the Clock to 1917:
The Very First MLB Turn Back the Clock Jersey

Top middle: This number font style is known as "NCAA," and it is used on various TBTC uniforms as well as some White Sox prototypes.

- July 11, 1990: The White Sox become the first MLB team to host a Turn Back the Clock game. This game-worn replica of the 1917 uniform is tagged "1990 Special Edition."
- The uniform is made of double-knit fabric with tackle twill numbers. While player numbers were not part of the original 1917 jerseys, they were required by MLB rules in 1990, resulting in this necessary concession to historical accuracy.

Above: Baseball card shows Carlton Fisk and Robin Ventura standing inside the construction site of the new Comiskey Park.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990 Turn Back the Clock to 1917, continued

For a day, Comiskey is a blast from past

Associated Press

Chicago, Ill.
An organ grinder and his monkey made their rounds through Comiskey Park. A barbershop quartet harmonized in a corridor. Popcorn sold for a nickel. General admission seats were four bits.

In the crowd of 40,666, men wore bowties and straw hats, women were dressed in two-tone, ankle-length skirts with bonnets and parasols. For one day, it was 1917 again.

The Chicago White Sox, who are leaving Comiskey Park after this season for a newer model across the street, turned back the clock Wednesday in their 12-9 loss to the Milwaukee Brewers in 13 innings. They came dressed like the World Series champions of 1917 — the last Chicago team to win a World Series — with short-brimmed caps, all white socks with no stirrups and a uniform with a bloused look.

Comiskey continued on page 12C

Associated Press

Chicago's Ozzie Guillen looked as if he had stepped out of the past in his 1917-style White Sox uniform.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993-1994, 1996, 1998 St. Patrick's Day

1993

1996, 1998 Three-color back numbers.

All sewn on, front logo is white/black. Back numbers are the same, except for 1996 and 1998 which are white/black/gray.

1994

During Spring Training in the 1990s, the White Sox occasionally marked St. Patrick's Day by wearing green jerseys. These events were promoted under the slogan "Good Guys Wear Green," a playful variation on the team's standard 1990s motto, "Good Guys Wear Black."

The jerseys appear identical across the years they were used, with no known seasonal variations in design.

1996

This model with the reversed logo (black outlined with white) is a retail sale version, and as far as I know was not used on the field.

© GameWornGuides.com

1995 Turn Back the Clock to 1964

Halper Collection

Left: 1966 and 1967 original jerseys. Notice tiny back numbers.

July 5, 1995: The White Sox hosted the Yankees for a Turn Back the Clock game to 1964. The Yankees, as usual, ignored the occasion, wearing their regular 1995 road uniforms.

Sleeve Number

Aside from the different player number font and the small sleeve patch, the reproduction White Sox uniforms from 1965 look almost identical to their current 1995 suits.

© GameWornGuides.com

1997 Turn Back the Clock to 1917

At home on June 16, 1997, the White Sox wore retro 1917 World Series uniforms for an interleague match-up against the Cubs. If the design looks familiar, it's because a similar version was later adopted as the team's Sunday alternate jersey in 2001.

However, the 1997 Turn Back the Clock jersey differs in several key ways. Most notably, it features American flags sewn on both sleeves, whereas the 2001 version has the flag on the left sleeve and the American League 100th Anniversary patch on the right. The 1997 model also includes a stiffer stand-up collar and longer sleeves—both absent from the 2001 jersey. On the back, the number font used in 1997 is called "NCAA" and appears in one-color navy blue. By contrast, the 2001 version uses the Red Sox-style number font and adds an American flag patch on the upper back collar (added after 9/11/2001).

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Negro Leagues Tribute (1911 Chicago American Giants)

Uniforms from this set have surfaced signed, suggesting they were likely auctioned for charity at some point. These were worn on May 29, 1999, in a game against the Detroit Tigers, who dressed as the 1920 Detroit Stars. The White Sox uniforms were made of knit fabric by AIS

Below: Photo of the 1911 Chicago American Giants.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Turn Back The Clock to 1969

Bill Henderson Collection

The White Sox served as the road team in this July 19, 1999 Turn Back the Clock game, appearing as the 1969 White Sox from 30 years prior. Rawlings double knits were used in place of the original flannel uniforms. Their opponents, the Brewers, dressed as the 1969 Seattle Pilots.

The TBTC jerseys are reasonably faithful reproductions, featuring a beautifully rendered team script. However, the sleeve and neck trim is too wide—modern knit instead of the narrow trim used on the original flannels. Additionally, the unique 1960s White Sox number font—a hybrid of Red Sox style and Varsity—is not replicated. It is replaced by modern Block standard..

1970 original

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock

- September 10,1999 Turn Ahead the Clock night. As part of a Century 21 Real Estate–sponsored promotion, teams were encouraged to imagine what their uniforms might look like in the year 2021. That the White Sox design ranks among the least offensive of the group is perhaps the most generous assessment one can offer.
- The front logo is sublimated into the fabric, similar to a European soccer or cycling jersey. Back lettering is one-color metallic silver, applied as sewn-on twill
- The White Sox wore this jersey with a black undershirt and the Comiskey Park patch sewn on the left sleeve (right: news photo).

Daily Herald/Daniel White

© GameWornGuides.com

2000 Turn Back the Clock to 1902-1916

Above: The authenticated game worn jersey has the sleeves cut shorter. Many players voiced their dislike for these styles that they believed hindered their play.

This Turn Back the Clock game was played on August 12, 2000, in Tampa Bay against the Rays, who dressed as the 1922 St. Petersburg Saints, a local minor league team.

The White Sox wore navy blue uniforms representing their 1902–1916 road style. Made by Mitchell & Ness, the jerseys were knit with all-felt lettering and featured an ungainly ¾ sleeve construction.

Red Sox–style numbers were used on the back—an anachronism, as the original 1902–1916 uniforms would not have had any numbers at all.

2001 Turn Back the Clock: Fail

• USA Today, May 21, 2001: "Things have gotten so bad for the White Sox that their 1977 uniforms on (the Blue Jays') Turn Back the Clock day in Toronto never were tailored, leaving them only with caps from the year of the Blue Jays' inaugural season."

© GameWornGuides.com

2003 Turn Back the Clock to 1953

Steve Kraljic Collection

1956 original, same style as 1953

July 13, 2003: The White Sox wore Majestic-made double knit replicas of their 1953 flannel road uniforms in a TBTC road game against the Indians. Top right: For comparison, an original 1956 jersey—identical in design—is shown alongside.

Unfortunately, the reproduction missed the mark in several respects. The front "CHICAGO" lettering is too tall and lacks the subtle arch of the original. The back numbers are also oversized and do not accurately replicate the original font.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003 Turn Back the Clock to 1983

September 6, 2003: White Sox playing as the 1983 team. The Majestic-made jersey is quite accurate, down to the 1983 All-Star Game patch on the sleeve.

However, the numbers and names are rendered in the wrong font. Instead of using the mid-1980s Sand-Knit fonts that appeared on the originals, Majestic substituted the team's then-current block font. Apparently, no one had a proper copy of the 1983 Sand-Knit templates on hand.

© GameWornGuides.com

2004 Negro Leagues Tribute (1911 Chicago American Giants)

Steve Kraljic Collection

Game played on July 31, 2004, featuring the White Sox and the Tigers. The White Sox dressed as the Negro League's Chicago American Giants of 1911.

Back numbers are rendered in Block Extra Bold font.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005 Turn Back the Clock to 1959

Original
1959

June 18, 2005: Dodgers vs. White Sox Turn Back the Clock to 1959, a re-match of the World Series from that season. Cream pinstripe uniforms by AIS.

Very nice attempt at matching the odd player number font on both the back and the right sleeve. All lettering is black outlined with red.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2011 “Halfway to St. Patrick’s Day”

September 9, 2005
September 8, 2006
September 14, 2007
September 12, 2008
(RAINED OUT) September 18, 2009
September 17, 2010
September 9, 2011

- Interesting promotion first held in September 2005, featured green uniforms and hats, then held annually after that. Uniforms copy the home design, but replace all black elements with green.
- Note the Red Cross logo on the 2005 green batting helmet (in the photo at top right) for Hurricane Katrina relief.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007 Negro Leagues Tribute (1945 Chicago American Giants)

Steve Kraljic Collection

Game played in Kansas City, July 1, 2007. The White Sox dressed as Chicago American Giants. Knit uniforms made by AIS. Lettering is navy and red. No names on back; player numbers are in a font we have not cataloged here before.

The home Royals dressed as the 1945 Kansas City Monarchs. 1945 was the year that Jackie Robinson played for the Monarchs.

1945 Chicago American Giants

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 Turn Back the Clock to 1983

- On July 20, 2008, the White Sox hosted a Turn Back the Clock game to 1983 in honor of Harold Baines. They faced the Kansas City Royals, who wore their standard royal blue alternate jerseys.
- The Majestic-made White Sox uniforms were beautifully stitched and closely matched the originals. The only notable differences are in the lettering: the replicas use Wilson Varsity numbers and Block Standard NOB fonts, whereas the original 1983 jerseys featured slightly different Sand-Knit variants for both numbers and names.

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 Civil Rights Game

- This exhibition game pitted the White Sox against the New York Mets just before the start of the regular season on March 29, 2008. Continuing the theme started the prior year, team uniforms for this game are devoid of any team logos, featuring only the Civil Rights Game patch on the sleeve.
- Numbers on back are Block font in one-color black Block, no NOB used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 Independence Day

Worn only once, intended as a salute to the military on July 4, 2008. It is a mesh jersey.

Player name and number lettering on back is identical to home jersey, sewn in brown and white. No numbers are used on the front of this jersey. American flag patch is sewn to the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 Negro Leagues Tribute (1920 Chicago American Giants)

- Game played July 26, 2008 vs. Detroit Tigers, in Detroit (who dressed as the Detroit Stars Negro League team).
- Knit uniforms made by AIS for the occasion.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Negro Leagues Tribute (1926 Chicago American Giants)

- White Sox vs. Royals, May 30, 2009. The White Sox dressed as the 1926 Chicago American Giants (road), visiting the Kansas City Royals playing as the 1924 Kansas City Monarchs.
- Knit uniforms by AIS.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Civil Rights Game

1964
original

- The 2009 Civil Rights game was the first one played as a regular season interleague contest instead of as an exhibition game. It was held on June 20 in Cincinnati between the Reds and the visiting Sox.
- Both teams wore 1964 style uniforms made by Majestic in double knit fabric.
- The White Sox' road uniforms are the correct shade of light blue, though rendered in knit instead of the original flannel. Two-color navy/white Varsity numbers adorn the back and right sleeve.
- The original 1964 lettering is generally correct though not identically reproduced; compare to the sample (inset). Front CHICAGO is too tall, and numbers on back are two inches too large, name on back is slightly too bold and not quite tall enough.
- A Civil Rights Game patch is sewn between the name on back and the top of the collar. This patch is approximately six inches wide; larger than the prior years' patches.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Turn Back the Clock to 1959

1959 original

- 2009 Represented the 50th anniversary of the "Go-Go Sox" and their 1959 American League Championship. Their opponents, both in the 1959 Series and that day (June 25, 2009) were the Los Angeles Dodgers.
- The Dodgers declined to play along; they wore their regular uniforms instead, as manager Joe Torre did not want to create hype over a World Series that was 50 years ago.
- The Majestic pinstriped knits for the contest were not as accurate as the AIS recreated 1959 jerseys from 2005. These were just slightly off-white instead of cream-colored, and the player numbers were much too bold on both the back and the sleeve (inset: see original 1959 jersey photo).

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 Turn Back the Clock to 1929

On August 16, 2009 the Athletics hosted the White Sox in a Turn Back the Clock game to 1929. Majestic made the replica knit uniforms.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 Negro Leagues Tribute to 1926 Chicago American Giants

- On July 16, 2011, the Detroit Tigers host their annual Negro Leagues tribute game, and their opponent this year are the Chicago White Sox, as the Chicago American Giants of 1926.
- The blue pinstriped knit uniforms are made by AIS. White twill lettering is used, and the numbers on back are Wilson Varsity.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2014 “Halfway to St. Patrick’s Day”

2012: September 7; 2013: September 14; 2014: September 25. The White Sox continue the annual game promotion that they began in 2005, holding a “Halfway to St. Patrick’s Day” game at home in mid-September each year, and wearing these green pinstriped uniforms with green/white lettering. The uniforms, which are auctioned after the games, have year tagging and the same sleeve patches (including applicable memorials) that would be sewn on the sleeves of regular game uniforms. Through 2014 at least, these have been made of full weight knit and are not Cool Base. So, aside from the memorial sleeve patches worn in certain years and the team tagging, these odd-promotion jerseys appear identical since 2005.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Armed Services Day

As the guests of the Los Angeles Angels on May 18, 2013, the White Sox joined the Angels in wearing camouflage-lettered jerseys for the game. While they look very much like Memorial Day jerseys the team might have been wearing a couple of weeks later, the White Sox were at home for Memorial Day 2013 and therefore wore their own home uniforms, modified for that contest.

Desert camouflage lettering outlined with white and sewn on a medium-gray background is a decidedly low-visibility combination, and from any further than twenty feet away, these uniforms looked perfectly, completely blank.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013-2014 Memorial Day

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2013

On May 27, 2013 and May 26, 2014, the White Sox were the home team when MLB decreed that all teams should wear camouflage-lettered jerseys in a salute to the nation's military. Desert camouflage outlined with gray on the White Sox's black-pinstriped home uniform fabric made for a low-visibility combination, but better than some. Identify 2014 game uniforms by the inclusion of the DJR memorial patch on the right sleeve; the 2013 uniform has plain sleeves.

2014

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Turn Back the Clock to 1972

On July 6, 2013, a Saturday afternoon, the Rays wore their "Faux-back" 1970s uniforms in a "pretend" Turn Back the Clock game. They invited the White Sox to play along, and the South Siders complied, wearing uniforms identical to their 2012 (prior year) alternate 1972 Nostalgia uniforms. Note that though the White Sox are the road team, they are wearing home pinstripe whites. These are a new set of uniforms and not the 2012 uniforms being re-used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Memorial Day

After two seasons giving their home jerseys the camo treatment on Memorial Day, the White Sox opt for their black alternate on May 25, 2015. Once again, the top layer of all player names, numbers, and the team wordmark is desert camouflage, while the rest of the jersey remains the same as usual. The camo lettering on the black jersey makes for much better contrast than in prior years, however, the smaller front numbers and the "Sox" logo are still hard to read, especially from a distance. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white rather than its typical colors from 2014.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys, causing an unusual look of red and blue decoration on a black pinstriped jersey. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The White Sox wear their home white jerseys with the red-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in blue, including their front logo as well as front and back numbers. Player names on back are in blue. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1959

Both Chicago clubs lost legendary figures before the 2015 season – the Cubs with Ernie Banks and the White Sox with Minnie Miñoso. When the two teams met for interleague games in each ballpark, they honored both players with throwback uniforms. For the July 12 game at Wrigley, the White Sox wore this 1959 road jersey. These Majestic Cool Base throwbacks are slightly better than the similarly styled 1953 jerseys used in a 2003 game. Here, the black front lettering is much more accurate than the earlier attempt, but the black back numbering should be Block rather than the Varsity shown here. The White Sox retain the right-sleeve Minnie Miñoso memorial patch for the game, though, naturally, it was not part of the original. The Cubs countered with home jerseys from the same era, with every player wearing Banks' #14.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1959

Both Chicago clubs lost legendary figures before the 2015 season – the Cubs with Ernie Banks and the White Sox with Minnie Miñoso. When the two teams met for interleague games in each ballpark, they honored both players with throwback uniforms.

For the August 14 game on the South Side, the White Sox wore this 1951–1963 model home jersey. (Press reports and the jerseys' tags claimed it was a 1959 jersey, but Miñoso was a member of the Indians that season.) The cream-colored, navy pinstriped Majestic Cool Base jersey features the White Sox' classic logo in black/red on front, with player numbers in black/red on back and right sleeve. The back and sleeve numbers are much too bold compared to the originals.

All players wore #9 to honor Miñoso, and the jersey lacks the Miñoso memorial patch, though the Bill Pierce patch is present, and it relocates to the left sleeve to make room for the right-sleeve player number. The Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar, which was of course not on the original jerseys, is in the White Sox' standard black/white/gray color scheme. The Cubs wore similar-era road jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1976

With the White Sox having some of the more memorable uniforms in baseball history, it was only a matter of time until the late '70s "leisure suit" uniforms came back as a throwback. On August 27, in a game at home against the Mariners (who wore their regular road uniforms), the White Sox resurrected their 1976–1981 collared pullovers. Made by Majestic, the jerseys are excellent replicas of that distinctive style, with the navy blue front and back lettering and numbers in the proper pseudo-turn-of the-century type style of the originals. Intended to be worn untucked, the game jerseys lacked the front tagging of the sample version at top left. The anachronistic Miñoso and Pierce memorial patches appeared on the right sleeve, as did the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back of the neck. Mercifully, the period-accurate shorts did not return.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2017 Mother's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

All teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms for Mother's Day on May 8, 2016 and May 13–14, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The White Sox wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The 2016 version has the Eddie Einhorn memorial patch on the right sleeve

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The White Sox apply the camouflage trimmings to their road gray jerseys for the game on May 30. The front lettering and front and back numbers are rendered in woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are also simplified to single-color black from the standard black/white. The team wore their Eddie Einhorn memorial patch on the right sleeve for this game as they did with their other uniforms that season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Negro Leagues Tribute to 1926 Chicago American Giants

Steve Kraljic Collection

For the fourth time, the White Sox pay tribute to the Negro League Chicago American Giants with this particular uniform. In a June 4 road game against the Tigers, who wore Negro League Detroit Stars uniforms, the White Sox don these dark blue Majestic knit uniforms with white pinstripes. Front lettering in stylized white font (identical to their pseudo-throwback 1976–1981 uniforms) and player numbers on back in white Varsity. This is the first time Majestic made these uniforms (the first three were by AIS), and contrary to the earlier versions where the American Giants logo appeared as twill letters in a circle on the left sleeve, this year's sports a circular logo patch instead.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2017 Father's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

All teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms for Father's Day, June 19, 2016 and June 17–18, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The White Sox wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in light blue with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally black/white, becomes dark gray. The 2016 version has the Eddie Einhorn memorial patch on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck.

The White Sox are at home and wear their home jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the White Sox select the red twill version with blue outlines for their front lettering and for their front and back numbers, with a blue player name on back. The result is a design that looks like a color-inverted version of their home uniform from the 1950s and early 1960s, the last time they wore red on the current template. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. The team moved their Eddie Einhorn memorial patch to the left sleeve for this game in deference of the flag patch on the right.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Fail: Turn Back the Clock to 1976

Derek Damian Collection

I confess that before I included collector Derek Damian's jersey on this page I made him dig up the actual receipt from MLB.com to prove it was not a fake, after my experience buying one online that turned out to be as phony as a three dollar bill (see "Fake Authentics" chapter). I am satisfied this one is real.

Even in the wild 1970s, people shook their heads at this getup. Opposing teams taunted the Sox. Below: In the period photo showing players and coaches modeling the new uniforms before the start of the 1976 season, you can see the mugging going on among the subjects; no one wanted to take this seriously.

Your author remembers one of his favorite players, Greg Luzinski, a large man and a member of the Sox after leaving the Phillies, looking like he was wearing some sort of a forlorn, drapey Muumuu as he stood on the field in this getup.

This jersey will forever be known as the "Chris Sale Demolition Day" jersey, and were it not for this important footnote, it would get its single page of pictures, two paragraphs of description, and we would move on.

For those who may have missed the story, star pitcher Chris Sale demonstrated on that day of his frustration with the costumed spectacle know as Turn Back the Clock day, and also showed exactly how to NOT go about making one's grievances known to management. But allow me to first back up a bit.

Now, everyone remembers the White Sox's famous 1976–1981 uniforms. There has been nothing like them before or since in professional baseball. They featured blousy jerseys, meant to be worn untucked, with giant leisure-suit-like floppy collars. The team name, player name and numbers were all in a crazy sort of old-timey font. It was the 1970s, after all, a decade where taste and common sense took a vacation. The look was reportedly dreamed up by (then) White Sox owner Bill Veeck's wife as a costume meant to evoke baseball in the late 1800s. As a final disposal of tradition, an alternate set of short pants with heavy pads to be worn under knee-high white hose was supplied to be worn with these jerseys.

1976

© GameWornGuides.com

The 2016 White Sox had scheduled this July 23 event at the start of the season: Turn Back the Clock to 1976 day against the visiting Detroit Tigers. And they had promoted it heavily. Fans entering the stadium were to be given a very nice sewn-lettered replica of the team's 1976 navy road jersey, a model of the one that the players were to be wearing in that day's game. Chris Sale was scheduled to pitch that day. He later claimed that prior to that day, he had voiced his strong displeasure with the planned uniform selection, telling management that he could not play his best wearing something as unfamiliar and uncomfortable as he claimed these uniforms would be. Management made no change to their plans, and so, before the game, Sale entered the clubhouse and, in front of what fellow player Adam Eaton characterized as a large audience, took a pair of scissors to his uniform as well as an undisclosed number of teammates' uniforms, destroying them as they hung in the clubhouse. Eaton, knowing in advance what was to happen, saved his own uniform from destruction.

For his mischief, Sale was sent home that day and suspended for five games. He was also traded away after the season, but the club claims that this event was not part of that decision. He forfeited $250,000 in salary, and the team fined him $12,500 for the cost of the uniforms he destroyed. The game went on, with players wearing the team's regular-issue 1983-style nostalgia uniforms, and with teammate Matt Albers pitching instead.

In an interview after the incident, Sale said "The 1976 uniforms are uncomfortable and unorthodox. I didn't want to go out there and not be at the top of my game in every aspect that I need to be in. Not only that, but I didn't want anything to alter my mechanics… there's a lot of different things that went into it. Looking bad had absolutely nothing to do with it, Nothing… I get that you have to have the business side, and you want to take pictures of us with these things, whatever. If it's going to affect the style of play or the outcome of the game, I just thought that would be a no-brainer."

Left: Chris Sale must have missed the locker of Southpaw, the White Sox's furry mascot. And Southpaw must not have gotten the memo, as he appeared at the game wearing his 1976 TBTC road jersey, probably the only one there.

Below, Sale's complaints about pitching in these jerseys could be legitimate, as he pitched in the home white version of it in the 2015 edition of Turn Back the Clock.

© GameWornGuides.com

There is little argument that these dress-up contests are done for one reason: making money. Merchandising the event, selling the game-used gear, and marketing replicas in the team store and on MLB.com is the reason these events take place. Perhaps not ironically, the often trend-setting White Sox were the very first team to have a TBTC game, back in 1990, 26 years prior. Since that time there have been hundreds of nostalgia games, and hundreds of other costume events (pink uniforms for Mother's Day and the like). While fun for collectors, it all is a bit silly and must be somewhat humiliating for the professionals trotted out on the field wearing them.

So, why don't I have photos of a team issued example of the offending jersey to show you? That's an interesting question. Surely not ALL of them that were meant to be used in the game were destroyed. And they were available to buy from the Majestic online clubhouse store as Authentic gear, right? But immediately after the game, these were in low and no-stock online. Try as I might, I was unable to find a single photo of an actual team issued example. What I have been able to find are dozens of that day's giveaway jerseys from the stadium, all being offered for individual sale on eBay for prices from around $12-30. And so far as I know, Adam Eaton has not shared photos of his, saved from the pregame butchery. For a short time, the Majestic store on MLB.com had them back in stock for the "bargain" price of $319.99. Unintentionally but ironically, those lettered with now-traded Chris Sale's name and number were on sale for 1/3 off.

Above: A small selection of the dozens of eBay listings for the souvenir jerseys from this ill-fated game, still selling in February 2017.

Left: The irony of Chris Sale's personalized (retail) authentic TBTC jersey selling on MLB.com at a serious markdown.

References: Various web news sources; quotes are pulled from an article by Rich Mueller in SportsCollectorsDaily.com

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Memorial Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The White Sox apply this style to their home white jerseys as worn on May 27–29, 2017.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill–appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1–2, 2017 and July 2–4, 2018, the White Sox wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill – appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 3–4, 2017, the White Sox wear their road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Turn Back the Clock to 1917 World Series

Before 2006, the White Sox had last won the World Series in 1917, and for that series, debuted very patriotic uniforms in red, white, and blue with American flag patches and stars in their logo. Now, 100 years later, the style returns (as it has in a few forms in the past) for a throwback game on July 29. The team wore a throwback version of this 1917 World Series style as an alternate in 2001, and this Majestic Cool Base incarnation is very similar to that one, a full button front, where the 1917 jersey was half-button (see original at left). Navy/red umbers appear on back in McAuliffe-style Red Sox font (which, of course, weren't on the 1917 entry), while waving American flag patches correctly adorn both sleeves. White/navy/red sun collar and trim around both sleeve ends is also correct for 1917, though the proportions are different in this version. Of note, the 2001 alternate the team wore has the sleeve trim sewn on, where this version has knit trim sewn into the sleeve ends.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font.

On August 25–27, 2017, the White Sox wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and red sleeves with white nicknames and red numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. The front features the word "SOX taken from their official club wordmark, here rendered in white/red kiss-cut lightweight twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1968

The White Sox throw back to their powder blue era with this 1968 road uniform on April 17, 2018. Originally made in flannel, this full-knit Majestic jersey captures the spirit of '68, if not the details. Navy "Chicago" script with "WHITE SOX" in the tail is close to the original, though slightly less bold. Navy back names check in here in Block, where names on the 1968 version were much taller and more angular. Blue/white front and back numbers are the right color but are rendered here in Varsity vs. what may have been a MacGregor house version of Varsity on the originals. White/navy/white braid properly encircles the neck opening, and an Illinois Sesquicentennial patch appears on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Memorial Day

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, with dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers joined by solid-color black player names on back. The outlines are nearly impossible to see as the two colors are so close in hue to each other. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are again simplified to single color black, and a green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the US military, is stitched to the right sleeve. The White Sox apply this style to their road gray jerseys on May 26–28, 2018.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year; a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly-colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24–26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The White Sox wear jerseys with gray bodies and black sleeves with white nicknames and red numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide black/white/black trim. The front features the word "SOX taken from their official club wordmark, here rendered in white/red kiss-cut twill.

CHICAGO WHITE SOX

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The White Sox wear a black version of a new jersey with "White Sox" taken from their secondary club wordmark logo (and similar to, but not a copy of, their 1987–1990 home jerseys) on front with the front lettering and back numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Field of Dreams Game (1919 Home)

MLB at Field of Dreams is a recurring Major League Baseball regular-season game played near Field of Dreams in Dyersville, Iowa, a site popularized by the 1989 baseball film Field of Dreams. The first edition of the game was played on August 12, 2021, with the Chicago White Sox taking on the New York Yankees.

For the special game, the White Sox wear uniforms loosely based on their 1919 home uniforms, which are featured prominently in the movie (though they have thrown back to similar eras in the past, this is the first time the team explicitly said they were representing 1919, a year they most likely preferred to avoid given the game-fixing scandal that season). These cream-colored, pinstriped jerseys are made by Nike in Cool Base material, with the legendary “SOX” logo sewn in front in navy, and back player numbers in navy in a distinctive, almost art-deco style font. Numbers, of course, were not worn in 1919, and the anachronisms continue with Nike and MLB logos on front right chest and back of the collar, respectively. Wide navy braid encircles each sleeve above the opening.

© GameWornGuides.com

Prototypes and Oddballs

1971 Prototype Home?

White Sox manager Chuck Tanner is seen here in a promo image, wearing an unusual home jersey. This is the 1971–1975 version of the jersey (it is hard to tell if this is flannel or knit, but the style was the same in that era regardless of the material), but instead of the team's disc patch on the left sleeve, Tanner's jersey has his uniform number, a characteristic of the team's road jerseys only in that era. The home jersey had the number on the right chest, but Tanner's arm obscures if there is also a number there or not.

It is possible that the jersey is a sample that was made up for team approval in Tanner's size and lettered for him (a frequent practice in those days) and he simply wore it for the photo taken before the actual uniforms were in. We may never know for sure, but it is another interesting footnote to the White Sox and their many styles...

Thanks to Vintage Jerseys & Hats (@PolyesterUnis) on Twitter for surfacing this oddball.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972-1975 Prototype Home

This example was found and purchased by collector Steve Kraljic as a blank on eBay.

The White Sox first wore double knits in 1972, adopting the exact same style of their 1971 home flannels, even down to the zippers on front. The bold prototype shown here, however, may indicate that the team was at least open to considering a slightly more radical approach during the 1972–1975 run of this style (or that Wilson was hoping that they'd buy into it). This pullover knit jersey carries over the red/white "SOX" lettering on front of a white jersey with red pinstripes. However, it adds red/white/red/white/red trim around the neck opening and sleeve ends. The team's disc patch also makes the jump to this new version of the home jersey. Of note, the Wilson tagging in the collar dates from about 1974–1977, so it's possible, perhaps even likely, that this was presented for a uniform change not for 1972, but for the 1976 season, which is when the team opted to really break with tradition and go with their "Leisure Suit" sets instead.

© GameWornGuides.com

1972(?) Prototype Road

The White Sox made the jump to knit jerseys for the 1972 season, and this unusual jersey may have been a prototype for that season. Made by Rawlings, who did not make White Sox on-field uniforms until 1976, the jersey appears to be a gray/tan color (the White Sox ultimately wore blue road uniforms in that era) and features a Rawlings tag used between 1972–1986. The white/blue front script with “White Sox” embroidered on the tail matches that used by the team on its 1969–1970 road flannels, however the front and back white/blue numbers are a much bolder version of Varsity than was used by the White Sox in that era. The tagging likely precludes a date before 1972, so perhaps the White Sox were considering (or Rawlings was pitching) this combo, but the team ultimately chose simply to recreate their 1971 blue flannels with red/white lettering in knit for the 1972 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

1976 Prototype Home

This jersey is a surviving prototype of the new style previewed for the 1976 season. It was manufactured by Capital Ace of Tokyo, Japan—a company that would go on to supply uniforms for the White Sox during the “pajama top” era of 1976–1981.

The front lettering is tightly bound tackle twill, sewn to the garment with a heavy embroidery stitch. The back numbers preview the distinctive “Wild West” style that the team officially introduced and used 1976-1981.

© GameWornGuides.com

1976 Prototype Home

Nick DiSalvo Collection

These are two different Rawlings prototypes for the 1976 “Leisure Suit” uniform. Both are very close to the final style selected for team use, with the primary exception being the back number font.

The jersey on the right features owner Bill Veeck’s name. (While both jerseys carry the same number, the one with the NOB has the number sewn noticeably lower.) This unusual design is said to have been inspired by a whim of Veeck’s wife.

Notably, the back number likely represents the intended year of use and is rendered in the font known as “NCAA”—a style the White Sox would later use on the backs of several Turn Back the Clock jerseys.

Above: We have located a photo of the Rawlings sample specification tag on one of these jerseys

© GameWornGuides.com

1976-1977 Prototype Road

Bill Veeck was a consummate showman, known for creating out-of-the-box promotions and ideas never before seen in Major League Baseball. Yet the number of prototypes developed for these mid-1970s jerseys suggests that, eccentric as he was, Veeck and his team approached uniform design with serious consideration—exploring many possibilities before settling on a final look.

Presented here is a prototype of the White Sox's 1976–1981 road jersey, distinguished from the on-field version by its bright white collar. While the era's home jerseys featured contrasting blue collars, the actual road jerseys used matching collar fabric. This particular example is lettered for outfielder Richie Zisk, who played only the 1977 season with the team, possibly placing this prototype as a candidate to replace the all-blue road jersey soon after its introduction in 1976.

The Rawlings tagging dates to 1972–1984, firmly situating it within this distinctive and experimental era for the South Siders.

Above: A blue-collared game worn jersey of this era for comparison.

© GameWornGuides.com

1981 “Design the New Uniform” Contest

Three of the contest entrants that were rendered in the cloth by Sand-Knit (photo courtesy of Jared Wheeler, Mitchell & Ness)

For the 1982 redesign, the White Sox invited fans to submit new uniform concepts—resulting in over 1,600 entries. Some of the combinations were, frankly, quite unpleasant. The then-current Astros uniforms clearly influenced several of the designs, with bold color-blocking and unconventional striping.

Top right: The six finalist designs are shown.

© GameWornGuides.com

1981 “Design the New Uniform” Contest, continued

Chicago Tribune

© GameWornGuides.com

1982 Prototype Home

Above: For comparison, normal game jersey.

- Found for sale on eBay, where it was advertised as game-worn. The manufacturer tagging on this Sand-Knit jersey dates it to the 1982–1984 period.
- Note the extra red stripe running below the front lettering—a detail not seen on known game-worn jerseys of this style. Additionally, the red sleeve stripes are noticeably narrower than standard team-issued examples.
- While this jersey lacks the interior strip tagging on the back tail typically found on team-issued uniforms, it does feature the “Exclusive Sand-Knit” tag—usually reserved for team-spec garments.
- This is very likely a prototype version of the 1982 home jersey, manufactured by Sand-Knit.

© GameWornGuides.com

1986 Prototype Road

This is certainly a prototype button-front 1987 White Sox road jersey. It features what appears to be correct 1986 team tagging, is manufactured by Sand-Knit (the supplier of the 1986 uniforms), and includes the “Made Exclusively for the Chicago White Sox” tag sewn into the shirt tail. The jersey also carries the name and number of a rostered player from 1986, supporting the theory of authenticity.

Most likely, Sand-Knit created this jersey as a design proposal to submit to the team, incorporating realistic tagging to simulate an authentic garment. A similar uniform style was indeed adopted for the 1987 season, though with some differences: most notably, the “Chicago” wordmark on the final version is less stylized and lacks the underline seen on this prototype. For 1987, the White Sox ultimately switched suppliers, selecting Rawlings instead of Sand-Knit.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990s Prototype Batting Practice/Spring Training

Contrasting color mesh jerseys like these are sometimes seen used in Spring Training, used when the teams play split-squad games against other members of their same team.

Presented here for your consideration is a white mesh V-neck pullover Wilson batting practice jersey, featuring Block/serifs numbers on the back and the 1991 and later White Sox crest on the front. The Wilson manufacturer's tag on the lower front is a variation not previously cataloged among known game-issued examples, possibly reflecting its 1990s origin. A blank white rectangular twill plate is sewn to the lower front tail—typically an indicator of a prototype—but notably lacks the standard player or team information usually present. While this jersey may have been issued to a minor league affiliate, the absence of a Wilson sleeve logo suggests it could have been intended for MLB use. Wilson sleeve logos are often seen on minor league jerseys but are not permitted on ones used in MLB. Further verification from collectors or historians would be welcome.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990 Prototypes

Above: The documentary revealed that team brass showed sample jerseys at local parties to gauge fan interest in the new designs. The images above are from reenactments in the film with what appear to be vintage prototypes.

Below*: One of the prototypes at the time was a bold recoloring of the team's 1980s jerseys in the proposed new colors.*

In 2023, the White Sox and New Era released a documentary called Fitted in Black: How Hip-Hop Fueled The Greatest Rebrand In Sports. While the story mostly focused on the impact of the White Sox cap in hip hop culture, several former White Sox staffers described the process leading up to the team's 1990 rebrand, which included glimpses of prototype jerseys - some of which have not been documented in these pages before.

In the film, former White Sox VP or Marketing Rob Gallas said, "I was thinking actually about navy and silver, and we happened to ask a designer, 'What are the hot colors of the 90s going to be?' And instantly he said 'It's going to be silver and black.'" From that idea, the team made samples in both colors (as seen on the next page) and took a decidedly grass-roots take on focus group testing. Gallas noted that another White Sox marketing staffer "...took the uniforms to a neighborhood block party on the southwest side and then lay these jerseys over the a couch or put them on chairs and...let them see it and give us their opinion. And it was almost unanimous when people would see these samples laid out and they would immediately be drawn to the black and silver one with pinstripes."

The most interesting revelation in the documentary, was a sample of a jersey that was a black, gray, and white version of the team's 1980's "beach blanket bingo" look. Ultimately the White Sox did make a black alternate, but it was far more sedate that the sample shown in the film.

© GameWornGuides.com

More 1990 Prototypes

Bill Henderson Collection

These two nearly identical Rawlings jerseys were offered at auction in 2018. They are very likely prototypes for the 1990 season. The top one is in my collection and has navy with gray lettering and trim. The bottom one has black with gray lettering and trim. In a common practice, prototype samples are often supplied with the team manager's name and number on them. They are often tapered to make them look sleeker and more attractive. Keep in mind that this now-familiar jersey design was considered a "nostalgia" one in 1990 as the team had not then used this style wordmark since 1975. The two-color SOX front crest is just like the one adopted for the late-1990 pinstripe jersey and it appeared in reversed colors on the 1991 black alternate jersey as well.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990 Prototype Road

Continuing the trend of 1990 prototypes seen in the last few pages, here is what appears to be yet another. This time, it is a road jersey, very similar to what the team adopted, but with navy replacing black elements in the final design, much like one of the designs on the previous page. Again, we see this example made up to manager Jeff Torborg's specs, in size 46 with a tapered ("T" tag) body. One thing is for certain, the White Sox wanted to see a lot of options before they rebranded for 1990.

© GameWornGuides.com

Oddball Mish-Mash Road

The origin and intended purpose of this unusual Rawlings-tagged jersey remain unknown. It combines features from distinctly different eras: the collar evokes the 1976–1981 “leisure suit” style (with the addition of buttons at the neck), while the wordmark and sleeve patch align with the team’s 1991-and-onward design. The Rawlings jock tag is the 1992–1994 style, but it is only sewn on two sides—typically a marker of retail (non-team issued) garments. However, complicating that theory is the fact that it’s a size 42, a size rarely produced for retail and generally reserved for team-issued inventory.

This may have been a design prototype, though it’s difficult to imagine the club seriously considering a revival of the 1976–1981 aesthetic during the early ’90s, when nostalgia for that era was virtually nonexistent. A more plausible explanation is that it was a staff jersey, possibly made for a team trainer or clubhouse personnel. Similar hybrid garments were issued by other teams—though more commonly during the 1970s and 1980s, slightly predating this example.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992 Prototype Batting Practice

This curious BP top is hard to explain, but it may have been a sample created for team consideration. Russell became an official MLB supplier in 1992, and was allowed to display its “R” logo on jersey sleeves beginning that year. The White Sox began working with Russell at that time, while still maintaining a relationship with their previous supplier, Wilson. This jersey is made by Russell, and features the company’s 1992-only tagging, along with a “100% Polyester” flag tag beneath the jock tag—usually an indicator of team-issued garments. Russell’s “R” logo also appears on the sleeve, reinforcing the 1992 production date suggested by the tagging.

However, there are several anomalies. The front logo and back numbers are in white/black/white, a style the team did not adopt for batting practice or alternate black jerseys until 1993. In addition, the white/black/white neck and sleeve-end trim does not match any BP jersey the team wore during this period. This unusual mashup seems most likely to have been a sample made ahead of the 1992 season that the team ultimately rejected—but it may have inspired elements of the team’s design direction in the following year.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990s Alternate Oddball

The origin of this one is unclear. All the other prototypes for the 1990 redesign seen in previous pages came from Rawlings. This outlier, made by Victory Athletic, is a mystery. It has the sleeve ends and logo style from the 1993-and-later version of this jersey, so perhaps it wasn't intended for the 1990 change. Victory did make some throwback uniforms for MLB teams, and some prototypes for individual players to try—most notably thew Astros in the mid-to-late 1990s. A curious connection to this jersey is that one Astros throwback prototype used #17 on back like this one. The presence of the Victory logo on the sleeve here suggests it may have been a minor league issue, as it would not have passed muster with MLB. Also, given Victory's location in California, this one could have been made for a TV or film production too. Any info on this oddity would be appreciated!

© GameWornGuides.com

1993 All-Star Pregame Michael Jordan

Michael Jordan – July 12, 1993: Seen here as part of a celebrity pregame event at the MLB All-Star Game, Jordan is wearing a White Sox jersey with an Upper Deck patch on the sleeve and an Upper Deck-branded cap. (That's Tom Selleck in the Orioles uniform with Jordan, above left!) These kinds of product placements don't happen by accident—you can safely assume some sponsorship was involved.

© GameWornGuides.com

1994 Unused Turn Back the Clock to 1964

Photo: Barry Halper Collection

In searching for the date this game was played, we uncovered that while it was scheduled to be played on September 4, 1994 to recognize the anniversary of the White Sox finishing only one game behind the Yankees in 1984 (!) However, because of the MLB player strike of 1994, it appears this game was never actually played and was replaced by the game of July 5, 1995.

- 1994 scheduled Turn Back the Clock jersey is a replica of the Sox' 1964 era jerseys, though it looks almost identical to the team's regular-edition home jersey from 1994, except without a number on the front chest.
- Numbers are two-color, navy/white. Note sleeve numbers.
- The sleeve patch is a 1994 team addition; no such patch was worn on 1964 jerseys. Knit jerseys made by Wilson.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 Prototype Home Vest

This is an early prototype of the White Sox's first sleeveless jersey design, worn in this configuration only in 1999. While it appears identical to the game-used version, two telltale signs identify it as a prototype: the use of "Player" and the number "5" on the back—common sample lettering from Russell—and the 1996–1999 style Russell tag. Notably, 1999 is the only year this jersey carried the Russell logo on the back neck; it was replaced by the MLB batterman logo starting in 2000.

© GameWornGuides.com

2001-2003 Prototype Home Vest

This plain white vest without pinstripes and with simple placket trim is likely a Russell prototype submitted to the team for consideration. The Russell tagging on this jersey dates to mid-2001–2003, The lack of a neck-sewn size tag, and the inclusion of the garment size/100% Polyester flag pinched under the front tail tag locker indicates it was made from stock that was created for team issue, not retail sale. The red mark on the tag signals that it was slated for disposal.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 Prototype Gold Trimmed

The 2005 White Sox shocked the baseball world by sweeping the Houston Astros and winning the 101st World Series. The White Sox had last won the series in 1917, 88 years prior!

This gold-trimmed prototype jersey was made by Majestic for the White Sox's consideration, most likely to be used at the home opener of the 2006 season only (thus the number "6" on the back of the prototype), and mimicked the gold-outlined Red Sox uniform worn in 2005 when the Boston team won the 2004 World Series after a similar drought.

In the end, there were no special uniforms worn by the White Sox in 2006 to commemorate their World Series win, only a sleeve patch worn throughout the season.

© GameWornGuides.com

Extra Condensed Font for Very Long Names

Alternate black jerseys 1993–2017 use three-color names on back. When player names are very long, the tailor will switch to an extra-condensed and light version of the font for the name on back.

1987 Spring Training Pants

Normally we don't mention pants, but these are claimed to be from 1987 Spring Training, and I would bet money that the "SOX" graphic patch on the leg is covering up the old player numbers that are sewn underneath.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Flex Base Test Jerseys

Bill Henderson Collection

In the competitive marketplace of supplying uniforms for professional sports teams, constant innovation has become a necessity. On-field uniforms not only have to be acceptable as work wear for hundreds of athletes, but they must also represent the vaunted brands of the teams they promote. Making changes to these garments is not a casual business. Rather, new ideas are developed, designed, and tested over a matter of years.

On this page and the next, we share two examples. These are Majestic Flex Base test jerseys that were game used during the 2012 season, a full four years before the new Majestic Flex Base "uniform system" was introduced league-wide. This jersey features the "Air Belt" mesh tail that was eventually adopted for the final

Continued, next page

Inside tag carries unique "063T" code

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Flex Base Test Jerseys, continued

product, as well as heat-pressed mesh logos and numbers that were not ultimately used. The strip tag indicates that this is a test issue, as does the wash tag "063T" code, where the "T" likely also stands for "test." We have seen several other such examples with similar strip tagging. All were "Test A" jerseys. It is unclear if any other versions were tested in this way. But given Majestic's propensity for multiple versions of prototype uniforms, it is possible there are other iterations out there, especially since Majestic said they worked with more than 50 players to design and test this iteration of jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 Nostalgia Alternate Sample

After throwing back to 1972 with a spot-on throwback alternate in 2012, the White Sox moved ahead a decade with a new throwback alternate in the 2013 season. That year, they brought back their popular 1983 “SOX” pullover for a handful of home games, and here we present a prototype for that style.

All the usual prototype signals are here, the size 46 jersey, the use of “Player” and the year (13 for 2013) on back, and the sample tagging, here reading WSX-HJ-D1-1-TBTC-1983” for White Sox home jersey, design one, sample 1, Turn Back the Clock, 1983.” Note the unusual application of the sample tag, that seems to be half-sewn into an interior hem rather than inside a button placket, which this pullover, of course, lacks.

Ultimately, the team chose this option for 2013. And, the team and fans liked it so much, it lasted as an option through 2024 in the MLB Style Guide, though it was last used on-field in 2023.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Alexei Ramirez wears #9 Miñoso Jersey

For the 2015 White Sox home opener on April 15, shortstop Alexei Ramirez wore Minnie Miñoso's name and number on the back of his home jersey in honor of the White Sox legend who passed away before the season. The jersey also had the Miñoso memorial patch on the right sleeve. He went back to his own name and #10 for the next game.

Alexei Ramirez salutes late Minnie Miñoso with uniform tribute
Doug Padilla, ESPN.com
April 11, 2015

Ramirez cleared the idea with the team, and that was good enough for the league. Normally, changing a uniform number or name on the back of a jersey would have to be met with league approval, but an MLB spokesperson said this was a "non-issue," calling it "a wonderful tribute to Miñoso."

Ramirez felt inspired to make the tribute.

"My relation with Minnie was beyond the field," Ramirez said through an interpreter after the game. "When I heard the news about his death, I thought that I had to do something to give him my tribute. And I kept in communication with the family and I asked them to wear his number today, and they accepted. For me, it's an honor."

Ramirez is expected to wear his regular uniform in Saturday's game against the Minnesota Twins, but he will keep Friday's uniform in his home to remember the occasion.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023: Whoops! Giolito's Skewed Sock Patch

Far Left: Giolito's skewed sleeve patch on April 23, 2023.

Left: The proper orientation of the patch from a previous Giolito start on April 12, 2023

Something was askew for White Sox pitcher Lucas Giolito on his April 23, 2023 start against the Rays (and it wasn't surrendering two home runs and four earned in seven innings of work to take the loss). Giolito's sleeve patch, which has provided a visual representation of the team's name on the black alternate jerseys since 1993, was sewn 45 degrees too far clockwise, making the white sock seem to recline vs. its usual "hanging" orientation.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Prototype Home

Soon after Nike took over MLB jersey manufacturing in 2020, they had intended to release their Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template as early as 2022. However, a source told Uni-Watch in 2022 that the plans were “pushed back at least to 2023, and possibly even 2024.” Ultimately, the new template was in fact delayed to 2024, but here we have evidence that prototypes were made up in advance of the 2023 season, if not earlier.

This White Sox home jersey, at first glance, is mostly the same as what they wore before and after the switch from Nike’s version of Flex Base to VPE. Closer inspection reveals that the template is VPE - including the lower MLB logo on back, smaller player name lettering, and perforated back numbers. (The home jerseys ultimately did not use perforated numbers.) The tell-tale “Player” and “23” on back reinforce this as a sample, intended for the 2023 season.

The heat-pressed inventory tag also reveals some info, and leaves us with some mysteries. It reads “DH0768 RX 2023 HOME CONVERSION JERSEY P2.” There is also a small, handwritten “1” on the bottom corner of the tag. Here, “RX” is a code Nike has inexplicably used for the White Sox elsewhere, and “2023 home” is self explanatory. The “DH0768” indication is not clear, although Nike has used a “DX” prefix for four-digit style numbers in its Vapor Premier Elite line for colleges, so this may be an internal model number for the pro jerseys. The use of “Conversion Jersey P2” is also unclear, unless it refers to converting from the Flex Base template to this one, and this is a second iteration of a sample.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Prototypes: Home/City Connect

RGVDEAL on eBay

RGVDEAL on eBay

In advance of the switch to Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) in the 2024 season, Nike made prototypes of jerseys on the new template for team review. By the point that these samples were made, teams had already seen some early drafts with many missing or incorrect details, just to get a sense of the materials and construction. However, many of the later samples, like the two shown here, were very close to what eventually appeared on the field in 2024. These White Sox home and City Connect 1.0 versions are two such examples. In many ways they replicate the team's existing jerseys, just carried over to VPE, which meant that things like the original sleeve-end trim was now sewn into the edge of the sleeve instead of on it, and the team's sleeve patch was much lighter embroidery than before. The back numbers on these samples are also perforated, which was not an element of the earlier versions. However, when appearing on-field in 2024, the perforations were included on the City Connect jersey, but not the home one.

Note the sample information that is on the Nike tags, which read "WHITE SOX HOME JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT" and "WHITE SOX CC JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT", with 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples that were usually size 46. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the "DH0768-100" and "DN5210-010" text on the front tags mean. They are likely internal production codes, as all 2024 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

© GameWornGuides.com

Commemorative Patches

White Sox Patches

1983

1984

1985

1991

1994
Spring Training

1992

1995

1995

1997

- 1983: All-Star Game.
- 1984: 6/46 Memorial Patch for coaches Charlie Lau and Loren Babe
- 1985: Comiskey Park 75 Years.
- 1991: Comiskey Park Inaugural Year.
- 1992: Black diamond (gray on black jersey) for the death of owner Jerry Reinsdorf's assistant Sherri Berto, and Maureen Schueler, wife of GM Ron Schueler.
- 1994 Spring Training: Black "31" patch in support of White Sox pitcher Scott Radinsky, who was diagnosed with Hodgkin's disease in February of that year.
- 1995: 95 Years (two versions: white is for black alternate jersey, black goes on home and road).
- 1997: Nellie Fox (worn on black alternate and road gray jerseys instead of Jackie Robinson patch) celebrating Fox's posthumous election to the Hall of Fame that year.
- 2003: All-Star Game.
- 2006: 2005 World Series Champions patch at home only, team game jersey version is black, gray and white. The color version sold at retail but not worn by the team.

2003

2005

Color version for retail sale not used by team

© GameWornGuides.com

- 2012: “BMS” patch for Bill “Moose” Skowron added May 5, he had been the community relations representative for the White Sox. “HIC Man” patch coach Kevin Hickey added May 22.
- 2013, August 24: Texas at Chicago White Sox (Civil Rights game). This was the first such game where there were no special uniforms, only this patch temporarily glued to the chests of the players on the White Sox and Rangers for that single day.
- 2014: DJR memorial diamond added on the second day of the season to mark the untimely death of owner Jerry Reinsdorf’s son David. Worn on left sleeve opening day, but on the right sleeve the rest of the season.

© GameWornGuides.com

- 2015: “9” patch for former player and coach Minnie Miñoso, who died March 1.
- 2015, starting August 11: “19” patch for former player Billy Pierce, who died on July 31.
- 2016: “Eddie” patch for team vice chairman and minority owner Eddie Einhorn, who died February 24.
- 2016, April 13: “Heart of 29” patch in recognition of Rod Carew’s campaign against heart disease (Carew, who is a heart failure patient, wore #29 during his career). The opposing Twins, Carew’s former team, also wore the patch that game.
- 2020: “Farmio” memorial for former broadcaster Ed Farmer who died in April, right sleeve, all jerseys.
- 2021, starting July 10: Oval “MR” memorial patch for Meryl Reinsdorf, wife of White Sox chairman Jerry Reinsdorf. Meryl designed the White Sox 2005 World Series champions rings (as well as five Chicago Bulls NBA champions rings) and the patch echoes the White Sox ring design.
- 2025, starting July 11: 45 memorial for former pitcher Bobby Jenks

White Sox: Postseason Patches

2005 World Series
(right sleeve)

© GameWornGuides.com

2023-2025 White Sox Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

As of press time, the White Sox had not yet made a deal with a jersey patch sponsor. In 2023, the location of the team's typical sleeve patches varied depending on the handedness of each player, perhaps in preparation for a sponsor that did not materialize.

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Chicago White Sox 1970 Home Game Used Jersey: Christian, Hopkins, Kelly

Examination Date: March 19, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0319J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson-made cream colored flannel jersey, size 42 (marked; measures closer to a 46) seven button-front, dark blue/white/dark blue uniform braid trim at sleeve ends, dark blue piping (not soutache) sewn into the placket Diamond-shaped vented with six-hole gussets sewn under each arm. "SOX" team crest on the left chest in dark blue twill. #18 on the left chest and on the back in the proper fonts and size for the team, also in dark blue tackle twill. Blue name on back, KELLY, in the team's tall font. Light table research shows that this jersey has been issued three times, yet it remains in near-pristine condition. Its most likely history is:

1) "Christian" player name tag in the neck. Outfielder Bob Christian was on the 1970 roster and played in twelve games in 1970 before being released on May 24, 1970. He wore #15. The barely discernible ghost edge of the second numeral, "5", is visible under the current "8" on the light table.
2) Ghosts of HOPKINS name on back are visible on the light table. Infielder Gail Hopkins played on the 1969 and 1970 White Sox with #18. Both Christian and Hopkins are listed as 5' 10" and 180 lbs. How this jersey came to be issued to Hopkins after Christian's release would be speculation, perhaps it was issued as a mid-season replacement or backup if one of his originally issued jerseys had become damaged. Regardless, Hopkins played in 116 games that season and this jersey does not exhibit heavy use.
3) Presently, the jersey retains #18 on its back and front, with the name KELLY stitched on back. Infielder Pat Kelly was signed for the 1971 season (6' 1" 180 lbs) and Hopkins had been traded to the KC Royals before the start of the season. Most likely, Kelly wore this re-issued jersey in 1971 spring training. The team changed uniform styles for the 1971 regular season, so it appears that at this point, the jersey was not used further.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson locker tag on the outside left tail is the correct style and the correct placement for the 1970 White Sox. Stitched beneath it is 1970-2 in blue hand chain stitch on it on the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher. There is a cream-colored flannel tag sewn in the back of the neck with the original owner's name, "CHRISTIAN" hand chain stitched and matching exemplars. It is sewn through only one layer of the placket as is proper, the tag was sewn there before the jersey was completed and sewn shut.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good condition, far better than most of this style and age that I have evaluated. It is clean and bright and presents very well. The blue twill is burnished from use, but is not faded and is all securely attached an un-puckered. Even though it had been thrice-issued, it seems to have received limited use. There are no noted repairs.

Conclusion: In my professional opinion, this jersey is authentic and was made for and worn by multiple players of the 1970-1971 Chicago White Sox. The changes it exhibits had been done by the team back in the day. It is team-original and is free of damage or contrivance.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Carlos May 1971 Chicago White Sox Home Game Used Jersey

Examination Date: December 29, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1229J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson-made cream colored flannel jersey, size 44 (marked; measures closer to a 46) zipper-front, white with red chalk pinstripes. "SOX" team crest on the left chest in dark red over white. #17 on the left chest and on the back in the proper fonts and size for the team, also in red over white tackle twill. There is correctly no name on back. The team's embroidered logo disk patch in red, white and gray is stitched to the left sleeve. As received, this jersey had been restored earlier with front and back numbers that did not exactly match the original ghost marks. Besides being slightly too big and bold, the red twill used for the restoration was the wrong shade of red, too bright and not color-matching the front "SOX" crest. Additionally, the red color from the new twill lettering had run into the jersey fabric so that when the replacement numbers were removed there was clear damage from color bleed. I stripped the replacement numbers, and using the ghosts and my original team patterns, recreated the number sets using the correct colors of fabric. I media blasted them and organically dyed the new fabric to match the patina and wash-staining of the original 1971 crest. I washed the jersey using a commercial color run remover product that was common in the 1960s and 70s, which did its job admirably, I then re-sewed the replacement numbers in place over the original ghosts. While I steamed the fabric to help erase the stitching outlines left from the incorrect restoration, the old lines are still slightly visible under close examination.

At 6' 0" tall and 215 lbs, Carlos May wore #17, and this jersey would have been an appropriate size for him. He was a member of the White Sox 1970-1976, and played in MLB for ten seasons. In 1971 he appeared in 141 games and hit .294 in 500 at bats with seven home runs. Normally an outfielder, in 1971 only he moved to first base. When the White Sox acquired Dick Allen for the 1972 season, he went back to the outfield. May was all All-Star in 1969 and 1972. While playing for the White Sox he had the rare distinction of wearing his birthday on the back of his uniform, including his surname: "MAY 17." (Wikipedia, Baseball Almanac)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson locker tag on the outside left tail is the correct style and the correct placement for the 1971 White Sox. Stitched beneath it is 1971-ST in red hand chain stitch on it on the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher. (The meaning of the designation ST is unknown; usually it will stand for Spring Training. Speculation only, perhaps his jersey this jersey was prepared for him because his normal jersey was damaged or lost) There is a cream-colored flannel tag sewn in the back of the neck with his name, "MAY" hand chain stitched and matching exemplars. It is sewn through only one layer of the placket as is proper, the tag was sewn there before the jersey was completed and sewn shut.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good condition, far better than most of this style and age that I have evaluated. It may have been used again in 1973 spring training, but the White Sox switched to double-knit jerseys for the 1973 regular season which would have rendered this style obsolete at the MLB level. Speculating that it had been stripped of its original numbers anticipating its re-issue in the minor leagues, but that it was never re-numbered and was spared being used and abused in the minors, as is commonly seen on so many of this style and issue jersey. The brass TALON zipper is original, and puckering of the flannel fabric behind the sleeve patch is evident showing that the garment was washed in hot water. There are no noted repairs.

Top left, the jersey as received with the earlier number restoration. Below, the light table reveals the original number ghosts after the removal of the replacements. Red color runs are visible, pre-laundering. Above right, the sleeve patch shows evidence of hot water washing as it has shrunk more aggressively than the flannel fabric beneath, leaving a significant pucker.

Conclusion: In my professional opinion, this jersey is authentic and was made for and worn by Carlos May of the 1971 Chicago White Sox. I have professionally restored the numbers front and back matching the original ghosts, and it is otherwise original and is free of damage or contrivance.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Bill Melton 1971 Chicago White Sox Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: March 29, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0329J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson-made zipper-front road jersey of third baseman Bill Melton of the 1971 Chicago White Sox. Light blue lightweight flannel blend body with old-style nylon uniform braid in red/white/red banding the sleeve ends and sewn tight to the edge around the collar. Team tagging and player name sewn into the back of the collar. Size 42 which matches other examples worn by the player at this stage of his career, and reasonable for his size and weight (6' 2" 200 lbs) Player number "14" on the back and on the left sleeve. Original TALON branded zipper is still in place and operational. Diamond shaped panels with gusseted vent holes are stitched into the underarm seams.

Restoration Performed: As presented to me, the jersey had been sent to the minor leagues, and had its original "Chicago" wordmark removed from the front. A red over white MLB home-jersey style "SOX" crest had been sewn to the left chest. From the condition of the replacement crest and the careless way it was stitched in place, I would conclude that it was taken off another White Sox MLB (home) jersey and transplanted to this one. The White Sox were a frugal organization and typically re-purposed their equipment until it was completely worn out. A light table examination showed that the original "Chicago" MLB crest had been present sewn across both panels of the front, so the owner elected to restore it to original. I carefully removed the replacement chest SOX crest; besides being sewn in place it had been glued down with a liberal buttering of some sort of adhesive that had yellowed. I cleaned the area the best I could without using strong solvents that had the likelihood of damaging the original flannel. Some adhesive remains, as was unavoidable, and the fabric beneath the crest is slightly darker from having had less exposure to the sun for the time it was used in the minors.

Besides some weak spots and perforated holes on the jersey's front from the earlier removal of the original CHICAGO crest, the jersey was in good condition with its original numbers in place and all trim still present. I hand-washed the jersey in Woolite, and it surrendered a fair amount of dirt into the wash water leaving it considerably brighter, though still with some ground-in dirt remaining on the stomach area. I repaired the weak spots and holes on the front using matching blue thread and a darning machine, identical to typical "team repairs" of the period.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

The jersey's owner, seeking complete faithfulness in restoration, procured another period-correct White Sox jersey, and asked me to transplant the front crest from that one to the Melton. I did, using the light table to guide the exact placement of the antique crest. So, while the crest has been restored, it has a look of originality that is impossible to match with new lettering. The team script is underlined with a tail that has the words "White Sox" hand chain-stitched on it. I stitched the crest in place using matching-color thread.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's manufacturer tag in the style used during the 1960s and through the 1973 season is stitched to the outside of the left tail, and exhibits a great deal of wear and edge fraying though it is still firmly attached. On the lower outside left front tail is hand chain stitch embroidery in red, matching exemplars, "1971 Set 3". The player name, "Melton" is hand chain stitched in red onto a piece of jersey-matching fabric and is correctly sewn into the inside of the back of the collar. The stitching holding the tag in place is invisible from the outside back of the jersey, indicating that the tag was stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, as is correct.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in good restored condition, with details as noted elsewhere in this evaluation. There is a telltale permanent dirty spot on the top of the right shoulder from having had a bat with pine tar rested there, countless times throughout its lifetime.

Here, the jersey as received and prior to restoration. Above right, the crest removal and the chest before and after glue removal. Below left, the highlighted ghost of the original CHICAGO script on front, as seen on the light table.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is a rarely seen example of a final-year flannel White Sox game worn jersey, uncommon today because most were simply worn out and discarded. It presents well and is faithfully restored, all original with the exception of the professionally transplanted team crest from another period jersey onto its chest. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Bill Melton of the 1971 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Restoration/Professional Opinion

Tony Muser Rookie 1972 Chicago White Sox Home Game Used Jersey

Examination Date: August 31, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0831J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson made zipper-front double-knit jersey, size 44 (marked but measured slightly smaller- due to evident hot water washing) white with red pinstripes. "SOX" team crest on the left chest in red over white. #25 on the left chest and on the back in the proper fonts and size for the team, also in red over white tackle twill. There is correctly no name on back. The team's embroidered logo disk patch in red, white and gray, somewhat distorted from washing shrinkage, is stitched to the left sleeve. The placket is lined with linen for player comfort as is typical of Wilson jerseys of this period. Typical of Wilson pro jerseys, the inside of the placket is lined with linen for player comfort. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without changes or contrivance.

"Palmer" is chain-stitched in the collar; pitcher Lowell Palmer was acquired from the Phillies after the 1971 season but did not make the opening day roster for the White Sox in 1972 and was traded to the Cardinals in June. Palmer never wore this jersey in a big league game, and this jersey was almost certainly reissued to and worn by a young Tony Muser. Muser joined the Sox as a mid-season call up playing in Chicago from July 10 through the end of the season in 1972, appearing in 44 games. Muser's first big season was 1973 with the White Sox when he became their full-time first baseman.

Muser played for four clubs in a nine year career. He was the manager of the Kansas City Royals 1997-2002, after which he was a coach, instructor and minor league manager for the Padres.

As Received: This jersey was well worn, with the linen lining inside the back of the neck worn through and partly disconnected on both sides of the neck, and the sleeve patch puckered and distortedly shrunk. The top layer of the front lettering (both team crest and front numbers) was badly frayed, and partly torn.Its owner wanted it restored. Had I removed the old lettering entirely, the puckered jersey fabric behind the lettering would have expanded into a wider shape and the new lettering would not have perfectly covered it. Since the white layer of twill was still presentable and well attached, we elected to do a measured and sensitive partial restoration to make the jersey presentable without destroying its originality. I carefully removed the top layer only of the front lettering, leaving the white outline layer attached. I washed the jersey to remove brown stains that came from the dried glue beneath the red layer of twill. Using scans of the original jersey as its own pattern, I cut new red front lettering (preserving the slight distortion of the original as removed), then media blasted it and lightly dyed it to simulate years of washing. I placed it exactly over the old spots and sewed in place with bleached-color thread. The end result is all but undetectable, as planned.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson locker tag on the outside left tail is the correct style and the correct placement for the 1972 White Sox. Stitched beneath it is a 1" x 3" piece of white knit fabric with "72 Set 2" hand chain stitched on it on the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher. Player name "Palmer" is chain stitched properly onto a 3" rectangle of white fabric and had been stitched into the neck prior to the placket having been sewn closed at the time of manufacture, so properly no stitching is visible from the outside back.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in fair to good condition, typical of others of this style and year that I have evaluated. Typical of White Sox first year knits, major puckering of the jersey fabric is evident behind the sewn lettering, caused by repeated hot water washing. It most likely was used again post 1972, either in 1973 spring training, possibly as a backup jersey for the same player in the 1973 regular season, or it was sent to the minor leagues.The white zipper is original. I have noted the details of the restoration above, I also flattened and resewed the partly-detached sleeve patch.

As received: The front lettering shows damage. Only the red layer was stripped from these two elements and replaced with aged twill to match.

Conclusion: This jersey was made for the Chicago White Sox in 1972, my conclusion is that it was issued first to Lowell Palmer, and then following his trade to another team it was reissued to Tony Muser and worn the rest of the season. In my professional opinion, it is authentic without contrivance and is in good mostly original, and minimally restored condition.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Rich Morales/Bucky Dent First Season 1973 Chicago White Sox Home Game Used Jersey

Examination Date: July 16, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0716J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson made double-knit jersey, size 40 (marked and measured) zipper-front, white with red pinstripes. "SOX" team crest on the left chest in red over white. #30 on the left chest and on the back in the proper fonts and size for the team, also in red over white tackle twill. There is correctly no name on back. The team's embroidered logo disk patch in red, white and gray is stitched to the left sleeve. The placket is lined with linen for player comfort as is typical of Wilson jerseys of this period. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without changes or contrivance.

Rich Morales was a backup infielder for the White Sox in 1973 after having platooned in the infield in 1972. At the end of May after only seven at bats in seven different games, he was traded to the San Diego Padres. The White Sox brought up young Bucky Dent from their farm system who then appeared in 36 games from June 1 through the end of the season (35 as starting shortstop) before becoming the team's regular starting shortstop for the 1974 season. Both men were nearly identically sized, and it is most likely that with Morales' departure at the end of May, the same uniform was re-issued to Dent to start June. Because Dent lacked the number of at-bats for qualification as a true rookie, 1974 was considered his rookie season, when he finished second in ROY balloting.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson locker tag on the outside left tail is the correct style and the correct placement for the 1973 White Sox. Stitched beneath it is a 1" x 3" piece of white knit fabric with "73 Set 1" hand chain stitched on it on the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher. The tag in the back of the neck is missing; it would normally have had the last name of the player hand chain stitched on a similar piece of fabric. The spot where the tag had been is cleaner than the surrounding fabric, which suggest to be that it was removed after significant use. Neck tags do not "fall off"- they are tightly stitched and all of the other stitching that holds on the lettering in place on this jersey are intact. Someone removed it, probably post-MLB use, for reasons that one can only speculate.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in good condition, better than most of this style and age that I have evaluated. It most likely was used again post 1972, either in 1973 spring training, as a backup jersey for the same player in the 1973 regular season, or it was sent to the minor leagues. It was spared the overuse seen on so many of this style and issue jersey . The white zipper is original, and puckering of the knit fabric behind the numbers is visible showing that the garment was washed many times. There are no noted repairs.

(Above) Exemplar shows the player name tag style that should be sewn into collar, below show this jersey with the tag ripped out.

Conclusion: This jersey was made for the Chicago White Sox in 1973, my conclusion is that it was issued first to Rich Morales, and then following his trade to another team midseason reissued to Bucky Dent and worn the rest of the season. In my professional opinion, it is authentic without contrivance and is in good original, unrestored condition.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Bill Melton 1972 Chicago White Sox Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: June 21, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0621J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson-made zipper-front road jersey of third baseman Bill Melton of the 1972 Chicago White Sox. Light blue warp-knit body with old-style nylon uniform braid in red/white/red banding the sleeve ends and sewn tight to the edge around the collar. Team tagging and player name sewn into the back of the collar. The size tagging is illegible, but measures as a size 42 which matches other examples worn by the player at this stage of his career, and reasonable for his size and weight (6' 2" 200 lbs). As is typical of Wilson knits, the inside of the placket and around the back of the neck are lined with white linen for player comfort.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Only parts of the original Wilson's manufacturer tag remain stitched to the outside of the left tail, and exhibits a great deal of wear with more than half of it missing. On the lower outside left front tail is a rectangle of jersey fabric, with hand chain stitch embroidery in Navy Blue, matching exemplars, "72 Set 3". The player name, "Melton" is hand chain stitched in red onto a piece of jersey-matching fabric and is correctly sewn into the inside of the back of the collar, both tags in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher. The stitching holding the perimeter of the collar tag in place is invisible from the outside back of the jersey, indicating that the tag was stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, as is correct.

Restoration Performed: To begin, the jersey was in very poor condition, stripped of its numbers and front crest. The collar and sleeve trim was mostly gone, leaving behind only its attaching thread. Significant reverse-fade marks and remaining thread clearly showed that the original "Chicago" MLB crest had been present, sewn across both panels of the front, and besides its original #14, it had worn #60, most likely in spring training in multiple years after its regular season use was finished. The fabric beneath the "60" was very bright blue, indicating to me that this jersey spent more years with these numbers applied than it had with its original 14. The fabric of this jersey was exceptionally dirty and sun-faded, but also was stained unevenly with red, as if it had been soaked with other red garments in a laundry accident. The body of the jersey ranged from the near-original bright blue under the numbers and front crest, to a dull grayish-purple on much of the back and the tops of the shoulder. Discolored marks at the shoulders look like it was stored on a clothes hanger in the sun for a long time, causing additional fading. The original Talon zipper had failed, and was partly detached. The white linen placket lining was surprisingly intact given the condition of the rest of the jersey.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Besides the staining and fading, the body the jersey was still intact without holes or split seams. I aggressively hand-washed the jersey multiple times with different detergents, and it surrendered a fair amount of dirt into the wash water leaving it considerably brighter. I hand scrubbed the most discolored areas with a diluted solution of chlorine bleach to try to even out the color. I replaced the zipper with a brass one very similar to the original.

Using the original team pattern from my archive, I reproduced the front Chicago crest, and starting with team number patterns modified to match the shapes seen in the ghosts. I recreated the player numbers for the back and the sleeves. I used identical vintage trim to replace the missing and ruined trim on the sleeves and collar. The small "White Sox" adornment on the tail of the Chicago wordmark was recreated in a machine embroidery stitch in white thread. To match the patina/age of the jersey itself, all the sewn lettering and the trim was media blasted to remove its sheen and then organically dyed to dull the bright colors to make it better match the fabric of the jersey it was sewn to. It was stitched with off-white thread.

The result of this restoration is the rejuvenation of a jersey that had been left for dead, and it now appears presentable and in approximately the condition it would have been in after a season of use in MLB plus multiple years of spring training utility. The ghosts of the numbers "60" that had been on the back and sleeves remain visible as the fabric that had been beneath them is brighter than the surrounding areas. The "14" on the back is purposely slightly distorted from having been aged and steamed prior to application, and its shape exactly matches the original ghosts on the jersey back.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is a rarely seen example of a first-year knit White Sox game worn jersey, uncommon today because most were simply worn out and discarded. It presents well and is faithfully restored. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Bill Melton of the 1972 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Chet Lemon 1976-1978 White Sox Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: October11, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1011J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Chicago White Sox Rawlings solid-fabric white knit pullover jersey with floppy Navy Blue collar. Size 42, both marked and measured. CHICAGO arched on front in Navy twill in the team's wordmark font as used 1976-1981. These controversial jerseys were meant to be worn untucked in opposition to conservative MLB styles. On back is the name and number of popular outfielder Chet Lemon and his number 44. Its size matches exemplars for the player from this early point in his career and is reasonable given his listed height and weight, 6' and 195 lbs.

Chet Lemon played for the White Sox 1975-1981. During the years 1976-78 this jersey could have been worn, he was the everyday center fielder for the team. Lemon was known as one of the best defensive center fielders in baseball from 1977 to 1987. In 1977, he led the American League with 512 outfield putouts, the fourth highest single-season tally in major league history and the highest tally since 1951. He also totaled over 400 outfield putouts in four other years (1979 and 1983-1985). He led the American League with 44 doubles in 1979 and also led the league in times hit by pitch (HBP) four times, including a career-high 20 HBP in 1983. He was selected to the AL All Star team in both 1978 and 1979. After his career ended, he became a baseball instructor and coach. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

This jersey was presented without provenance, and confirming actual game use is difficult. Rawlings made this style jersey for the team 1976-1978. I have evaluated many of this style jersey over the years, and there are details/variations in a factory-applied player name and number lettering that I look for. The lettering on this jersey matches one of the font sets as used by the team very well. It appears that both the wordmark and the player name/number were stitched onto it on the same sewing machine, most likely at the same time. Notably, this jersey predates by a decade a time when MLB on-field jerseys were available to the public at retail. There were a very few shops, (among them Lansing Sporting Goods in Lansing IL) that would custom-order team-spec jerseys for retail customers, but this practice was rare at the time.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings red "Mark of a Pro" rectangular tagging in the proper style for 1976-1978 is stitched inside the back of the neck, and is sewn through only one layer of fabric, indicating that it was properly stitched there before the placket was sewn shut at the factory. There is no flag tab present that would normally indite the year of issue and the set number, however these are commonly omitted and appear only about half the time on game jerseys in my observation. The tag is sewn on with dark green thread, another odd but consistent observation from my archives (usually on jerseys made in 1978)

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is in generally good condition, exhibiting appropriate wear. There are two slightly split seams; one on the top of the right shoulder and one at the bottom of the right side sam. The fabric colors are still reasonably bright and clean. The light table shows no signs of contrivance or re-lettering.

Above, exemplar photo shows use of the flag year/set tag on Rawlings White Sox jerseys 1976-1978 which was inconsistent. I have evaluated as many with them as without. Below, Lemon wearing this style jersey. At right, presented for interest is the inaccurate alignment of the back numbers, typical of the time. In a review of period news photos, a detail like this could prove useful to perhaps identify a specific game worn jersey.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition. It is properly lettered and is the right size for the player. It shows appropriate use and the correct vintage Rawlings tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications as would be issued to Chet Lemon of the 1976-1978 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Document of Restoration

Steve Stone 1978 Chicago White Sox Home Game Jersey

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: Chicago White Sox year tagged 1978 Rawlings jersey, Perez 52. Light table evaluation shows that this jersey had previously been lettered for STONE 32.

Work Performed: (August 2019) Stripped all back lettering, as there was clear ghost evidence that the lettering had all been replaced prior, including the "2"in the second position. (Evidence of slight mismatch of the current "2", plus several tiny holes from previous numeral's removal) Light table images, pre-stitching are shown below. All lettering was replaced with team font and ghost-matched lettering as had been there prior.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications
Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
The Dream Shop: MLB Jersey Restorations
http://GameWornGuides.com http://TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Tom Seaver 1985 Chicago White Sox Game Worn and Autographed Road Jersey

Examination Date: March 25, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0325J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Chicago White Sox pullover Sand-Knit road game jersey, size 48 marked (with special tailoring), measures as a 46. This is reasonable for the player at this stage of his career and matches other credible jerseys in our exemplar collection. Unique design jersey style has wide sewn in bands of red and Navy Blue across the chest with "SOX" boldly spelled out and sewn in white twill. The same red/Navy/red stripe pattern repeats, ringing both of the jersey sleeves. Navy/red knit trim rings the jersey's V-neck. On back, player number 41 and name SEAVER in a steep arch, using the Sand Knit house block fonts. The Comiskey park 75 year patch is sewn to the left sleeve, and it appeared to be original. The jersey is autographed in blue marker below the "X" in SOX on the front, "Best wishes, Tom Seaver, #297 7-14-85". I have no professional opinion on the autograph. (Seaver was the winning pitcher when the White Sox beat the Orioles while on the road in Baltimore on 7/14/85). This jersey was presented without provenance, so the idea that he wore this jersey on that date for that win would be an assumption.

Seaver's career spanned 20 seasons in Major League Baseball, with the Mets, Reds, White Sox and Red Sox. With the Mets, Seaver won the National League's (NL) Rookie of the Year Award in 1967, and won three NL Cy Young Awards as the league's best pitcher. He was a 12-time All-Star and ranks as the Mets' all-time leader in wins. During his MLB career, he compiled 311 wins, 3,640 strikeouts, 61 shutouts, a 2.86 earned run average, and he threw a no-hitter in 1978. He was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1992. (Wikipedia). In 1985, Seaver went 16-11, pitching 238.2 innings with 134 strike outs and an ERA of 3.17. (Baseball Almanac)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Sand Knit's tag set of two tags are stitched to the outside left tail. The first tag is the "Designed and tailored exclusively for the Chicago White Sox, American League, Sand Knit" the right tag is the Medalist Sand Knit size 48 tag, in the proper style for 1985 matching exemplars. This was artier to the time that on-field collection MLB jerseys were sold to fans, so it is a reasonable assumption that any White Sox jersey in this style with this tagging is a team issue. Inside the back tail of the jersey are two long fabric strip tags, respectively 3" and 4" long. The first reads "85 (star symbol) 48Z". The "Z" following the size designation is Sand Knit's identifier for special tailoring, and while it is not called out specifically, it appears to be for extra length. The second tag simply has the player's name "SEAVER" spelled out in capital letters in the familiar black marker handwriting of the Sand Knit tailor.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that all stitching is original and untampered with. The jersey shows signs of light to moderate wash and wear, most notably in the puckering of the front SOX lettering, the burnishing of the back numbers and slight fading of the blue attaching thread, and the yellowing of the tagging inside the tail. There is a stray blue dot from the marker beneath the autograph, a typical artifact on a jersey shoved in front of a player to sign. It is very likely that this jersey was pulled from use and then autographed, as it shows much less wear than typical issue White Sox jerseys in our on-hand collection and exemplar photo collection. There are several dirt marks on the jersey front above the X in SOX and on the white lettering of the word SOX.

Tagging form the jersey in review, top left; exemplars for other common player 1985 White Sox road game jerseys. Note that the two styles of Sand Knit manufacturer/size tags were used in 1985; the bottom left variant showing the MacGregor Sporting Goods name appeared late in 1985. The Kusnyer jersey is in our personal collection.

Conclusion: This jersey is in very good condition, is properly lettered, has no alterations of any kind and is without contrivance. It has the correct team tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and game worn by Tom Seaver of the 1985 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Frank Thomas 1993 Chicago White Sox Home Jersey

Examination Date: January 27, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J24

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Chicago White Sox Russell size 46 full-weight knit six-button pinstriped jersey of #35, Frank Thomas. While Thomas wore much larger jerseys later in his career, size 46 is correct for his use in 1993. Stylized "SOX" logo crest stitched in two colors, black over silver on the left chest. The number 35 is opposite on the right chest, as well as on the back, 5/1/2" from the collar with no player name above as is correct for the 1993 White Sox. Comiskey Park patch is stitched to the left sleeve. Frank Thomas was the American League MVP in 1993.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Both Wilson and Russell each were contracted to supply sets of home jerseys for the Sox in 1993. The Russell "R" is embroidered to the right sleeve end, as was permitted by contract; Wilson jerseys were not allowed to display a maker's mark. The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is stitched to the outside front left tail, in the style that first appeared very late in 1993; generally seen on jerseys made post-season or in 1994. one with a steeply arched "Diamond Collection" script on the embroidered logo with 4-line wash instructions. There is no flag size tag in the collar, and a small "100% Polyester" flag tag is pinch-sewn beneath the tail locker tag: both characteristics correct for jersey made to team-issue specification vs. those made for retail sale. Team tagging is screened onto a piece of knit fabric and stitched beneath the locker tag on the tail, bearing the code 35-46-93-1 (Player 35, size 46, 1993, set 1). In our photo archives we see that the White Sox used at least three different styles of coding tail tags in 1993 on Russell jerseys, and other jerseys with this variant of the style tag also have the late 1993-style Russell tag, and all are for the team's biggest stars. Multiple examples of Thomas Set 1 1993 home jerseys are documented to have been auctioned over the years. Given these facts, it is a reasonable conclusion that, especially with Thomas's notable 1993 season that a number of sample jerseys were made at the end of the season to be used as gifts for loyal customers or team associates.

Wear & Repairs: The light table reveals that the numbers 35 on back had originally been sewn 3" lower, then removed and re-sewn the correct distance from the collar. Ghosts and some glue remnants remain behind. The jersey does not show signs of obvious use or washing; all elements are crisp and unblemished.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent unused condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and aside from the corrected mis-application of the back numbers, appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for Frank Thomas of the 1993 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Bill Melton 1971 Chicago White Sox Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: March 29, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0329J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson-made zipper-front road jersey of third baseman Bill Melton of the 1971 Chicago White Sox. Light blue lightweight flannel blend body with old-style nylon uniform braid in red/white/red banding the sleeve ends and sewn tight to the edge around the collar. Team tagging and player name sewn into the back of the collar. Size 42 which matches other examples worn by the player at this stage of his career, and reasonable for his size and weight (6' 2" 200 lbs) Player number "14" on the back and on the left sleeve. Original TALON branded zipper is still in place and operational. Diamond shaped panels with gusseted vent holes are stitched into the underarm seams.

Restoration Performed: As presented to me, the jersey had been sent to the minor leagues, and had its original "Chicago" wordmark removed from the front. A red over white MLB home-jersey style "SOX" crest had been sewn to the left chest. From the condition of the replacement crest and the careless way it was stitched in place, I would conclude that it was taken off another White Sox MLB (home) jersey and transplanted to this one. The White Sox were a frugal organization and typically re-purposed their equipment until it was completely worn out. A light table examination showed that the original "Chicago" MLB crest had been present sewn across both panels of the front, so the owner elected to restore it to original. I carefully removed the replacement chest SOX crest; besides being sewn in place it had been glued down with a liberal buttering of some sort of adhesive that had yellowed. I cleaned the area the best I could without using strong solvents that had the likelihood of damaging the original flannel. Some adhesive remains, as was unavoidable, and the fabric beneath the crest is slightly darker from having had less exposure to the sun for the time it was used in the minors.

Besides some weak spots and perforated holes on the jersey's front from the earlier removal of the original CHICAGO crest, the jersey was in good condition with its original numbers in place and all trim still present. I hand-washed the jersey in Woolite, and it surrendered a fair amount of dirt into the wash water leaving it considerably brighter, though still with some ground-in dirt remaining on the stomach area. I repaired the weak spots and holes on the front using matching blue thread and a darning machine, identical to typical "team repairs" of the period.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

The jersey's owner, seeking complete faithfulness in restoration, procured another period-correct White Sox jersey, and asked me to transplant the front crest from that one to the Melton. I did, using the light table to guide the exact placement of the antique crest. So, while the crest has been restored, it has a look of originality that is impossible to match with new lettering. The team script is underlined with a tail that has the words "White Sox" hand chain-stitched on it. I stitched the crest in place using matching-color thread.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's manufacturer tag in the style used during the 1960s and through the 1973 season is stitched to the outside of the left tail, and exhibits a great deal of wear and edge fraying though it is still firmly attached. On the lower outside left front tail is hand chain stitch embroidery in red, matching exemplars, "1971 Set 3". The player name, "Melton" is hand chain stitched in red onto a piece of jersey-matching fabric and is correctly sewn into the inside of the back of the collar. The stitching holding the tag in place is invisible from the outside back of the jersey, indicating that the tag was stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, as is correct.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in good restored condition, with details as noted elsewhere in this evaluation. There is a telltale permanent dirty spot on the top of the right shoulder from having had a bat with pine tar rested there, countless times throughout its lifetime.

Here, the jersey as received and prior to restoration. Above right, the crest removal and the chest before and after glue removal. Below left, the highlighted ghost of the original CHICAGO script on front, as seen on the light table.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is a rarely seen example of a final-year flannel White Sox game worn jersey, uncommon today because most were simply worn out and discarded. It presents well and is faithfully restored, all original with the exception of the professionally transplanted team crest from another period jersey onto its chest. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Bill Melton of the 1971 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Sandy Alomar Chicago White Sox 2003 Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 4. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1104J26

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Chicago White Sox, Majestic, six-button home white pinstriped jersey of #15 catcher Sandy Alomar. Team "Sox" crest on the left chest on black outlined with silver-gray twill. Number 15 on the right chest, on the center of the back, with the name "ALOMAR" arched above, all in the same colors. The fonts and placement are correct for the 2003 White Sox. Jersey is autographed ion the back between the name and numbers by the player. (I have no opinion on the autograph.) The 2003 All-Star Game patch is stitched to the right sleeve.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Majestic logo is direct-embroidered into the end of the left sleeve in black. The Majestic locker tag, appropriate style for 2003, is stitched to the bottom outside of the left tail. Beneath this is a rectangular team tag with the machine embroidery "03 48 S2" (indicating 2003, size 48, set 2) The inside side seam tag is coded "0062" which is the designation given to team-spec jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey does not show signs of wash or wear. A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations. There are lines of hard glue along the tops of the shoulder seams with some black paper stuck to it, as well as row of (non defacing) staple imprints along the bottom third of the jersey's width, indicating that this jersey had once been mounted for display

Provenance: A signed letter from Roberto Alomar (not Sandy Alomar) was presented with this jersey as provenance, saying that it comes from his personal collection and is "100% authentic", however it is generic, and does not include any information at all on what it refers to.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent unused condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for Sandy Alomar of the 2003 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Frank Thomas 2004 Chicago White Sox Home Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: November 4. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1104J27

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2004 Chicago White Sox #35 Frank Thomas Majestic, size 48, six-button full weight white with black pinstripes knit jersey. It uses white pearl 4-hole buttons. 1" white/gray knit trim is sewn-in to the ends of each sleeve. "SOX" logo in two-color tackle twill on the left chest in black and gray. Player number "35" in the proper block font in the same colors on the right chest and on the back. THOMAS on the back, above the name, radially arched and direct sewn. There are no sleeve patches as is correct for 2004. All these characteristics match other jerseys in our photo archive. The lettering matches our templates in terms of style, colors, placement and outline-widths. Size 48 without tailoring is a reasonable size for Thomas; our records show he was wearing both size 48 and size 50 jerseys at this point in his career. The jersey is autographed on the front right above the numbers. (I have no opinion on the autograph.)

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: Majestic Authentic Collection locker tag is sewn on the outer, lower left shirt tail. The Majestic tag style is correct for 2004. Inside side seam tag is coded "0062" which is the proper style number for team-specification full weight knit on-field White Sox jerseys. Beneath the locker tag is a machine embroidered rectangular knit fabric tag that is encoded "04 48 35" (2004 size 48 player number 35). The tag has a serged edge and is attached to the jersey with a straight stitch. The Majestic logo is embroidered into the end of the left sleeve., the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck patch is sewn on the back of the collar, in the correct Black/white/gray. (A note on team tagging: the typical White Sox team tag for 2004 was coded in the style "04 48 S2" with the final S2 meaning set 2. This tag looks fully legitimate, and given the fact that Thomas notably ordered extra jerseys to be worn and signed, it is reasonable in my estimation that his tags had his player number instead of the set number.) 2004 predates wide use of the MLB hologram authentication program.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching is unaltered. It shows light wash wear, with visible wash wear on the inside seam tag. All twill lettering is crisp and unblemished with slightly frayed edges. There are no signs of any repairs. The autograph was certainly applied after the wash-wear to the jersey had occurred.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and shows appropriate use.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Bo Jackson 1991 Chicago White Sox Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: November 13, 2020 Certification Number:

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Rawlings full-weight gray knit, six button Chicago White Sox road jersey of #8, Bo Jackson. Size 48 with (T)appeared tailoring noted. All lettering is two layer stacked twill, black over white. Upward sloped "Chicago" in team script on the front with the player number 8 below. On back is the number 8 with "JACKSON" radially arched and direct-sewn above, On the right sleeve is stitched the one-year only Comiskey park Inaugural Year patch; on the left sleeve is the team's secondary logo, a white sock in a black diamond outlined with white and stitched to a twill backing. Sewn-in 1" black/white knit trim rings the ends of both sleeves. A small Velcro closure is sewn between the second and third buttons.

The jersey is autographed on the upper left chest "Bo Jackson #8". I offer no opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings script is embroidered into the end of the right sleeve between the knit trim and the commemorative patch. A Rawlings locker tag in the correct style for 1991 is stitched to the outside bottom of the left tail denoting the size as 48. Pinched beneath the right side of the tag is a white flag tag, "Set 2 1991". Beneath that is a 3/4" square of gray twill machine-embroidered with a capital letter "T", indicating that the jersey has been tapered narrower at the waist from the factory. The size is correct for Jackson.

Wear & Repairs: Injured most of the season, Jackson played in only ten road games for the 1991 White Sox, September 6 through October 5. The jersey shows signs of wash/wear, as would be appropriate use in that number of games. A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alteratons.There is some staining of the knit sleeve end trim, a stain of a stray black dot on the inside of the lower left tail (probably accidental Sharpie from the autograph signing) and softening of the fabric and lettering and wrinkling/puckering of the tags that is consistent with a month's worth of use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has the correct manufacturer and team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Bo Jackson of the 1991 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Bo Jackson 1991 Chicago White Sox Black Alternate Game Jersey

Examination Date: April 17, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0417J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Rawlings full-weight black knit, six button Chicago White Sox road jersey of #8, Bo Jackson. Size 48 with (T)apered tailoring noted and measured (48" under the arms, tapered to 40" at the waist) All lettering is two layer stacked twill, white over Silver-Gray (a one year twill color). Two-color White Sox team crest on the front left panel with the player number 8 opposite on the right panel. On back is the number 8 with "JACKSON" radially arched and direct-sewn above. It is very clear to me that this jersey was stitched by Rawlings at the factory and was intended for on-field use. Jackson had been injured for most of the season and played in just 23 games from September 2 through October 5 that year.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings script is embroidered in white into the end of the right sleeve between the knit trim and the commemorative patch. A Rawlings locker tag in the correct style for 1991 is stitched to the outside bottom of the left tail denoting the size as 48. Pinched beneath the right side of the tag is a white flag tag, "Set 2 1991". Above that is a 3/4" square of black twill machine-embroidered with a capital letter "T", indicating that the jersey has been tapered narrower at the waist from the factory. The size is correct for Jackson and the noted tapering is measured as being present. In my experience, jerseys which are made as salesman-samples or as extras for signing events are often not generally specially player-tailored, regardless of what the tagging says.

Wear & Repairs: All elements of this jersey are crisp and the patches stiff, indicating to me that, if it has been washed, it was no more than one time. A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations. There are several loose unclipped visible sewing threads on the jersey, notably in the center of the front 8 and the name on back on the letters J, N and O.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent, very lightly-used condition, is properly lettered, has player-specific tailoring, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has the correct manufacturer and team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for Bo Jackson of the 1991 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 40

New York Yankees

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970 - 2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Yankees Uniform History Notes

- In one respect, writing an overview of the Yankees uniforms from 1970 to present (2025) is very easy, because the team has made no real design changes to their uniforms, either home or away, since 1936. Except for tailoring and fit, their uniforms have looked the same for the past 90 years. The tiny, year-to-year changes are noted on the pages that follow.
- The interlocked "NY" logo first appeared on a Yankee chest in 1912. It has undergone minor changes in size and shape, but it is arguably the most famous logo in all of sports. In my travels, seeing people wearing Yankees-logoed shirts and hats is unsurprising anywhere on earth—China, Africa, Australia, Europe, Southeast Asia, the Middle East, and on any of the Pacific Islands.
- While the Yankees are credited with being the first team in baseball to use numbers on players' jerseys, they have never put a player name on any uniform, either home or road (other than the gimmicky league-wide promotional 2017-2019 Players Weekend games). The franchise values team identity over individual recognition, an ethos that sets them apart from all other MLB teams.
- (Wilson) Varsity style numbers are used on the back of every home and road jersey (minus 1975 road) from 1973 to present. The 1975 Rawlings-made road jerseys use Block, as did the 1970–1972 flannels.
- It should come as no surprise to those who know baseball culture that the Yankees were the last team to enter the double knit era, joining in 1973 with a just two other laggards (the Expos and Royals), who probably waited more for financial reasons than to preserve tradition.
- The Yankees' new knit home uniforms for 1973 were nearly identical to the flannels of 1972. Both designs are button front, lacking any trim in those places other teams often put it: around sleeves, neck, and around the front button placket. The only change we note is that player numbers became Wilson "Varsity" in 1973, gaining serifs on many of the numerals.
- Flannel road grays for 1972 were very plain, as they had been for decades, featuring single-color Block "New York" lettering and bold player numbers on the back only. The first road knits the next year were spiffed up with sleeve-end trim and white outlines around the wordmark and numbers. Positively revolutionary for the Yankees at the time.
- In 2006, all MLB teams were given the opportunity to select one jersey style and try out the new Cool Base jersey fabric and construction, designed especially for games on hot days. All did, except for the Yankees. In 2014, five years after other teams adopted them, the Yankees allowed some players to wear Cool Base road jerseys only. Finally, in 2016, the Yankees switched to the new Flex Base uniforms both home and away, with the rest of the league. But their home jerseys were notably missing the vented side panels.
- The Yankees began observing league-wide holidays like Mother's Day and Memorial Day in 2013, wearing mandated special uniforms for those occasions. Prior to that, they avoided any break from tradition—even abstaining from wearing throwbacks except on very rare occasions (e.g., 1996 Negro Leagues tribute, 2012 Fenway Park centennial). To date, the team has only worn throwback jerseys on only three occasions, by far the fewest of any MLB team.
- Through 2019, the Yankees never wore a jersey manufacturer's logo on the sleeves of their game uniforms. It was omitted for contractual reasons as the team had a long-standing agreement with Adidas that forbade them from displaying the logo of any other manufacturer on their game uniforms. While various manufacturers have made their uniforms over the years, the Yankees had never displayed a maker's mark on their sleeves while every one of the other teams in baseball had done so.
- When Nike takes over making MLB on-field jerseys for 2020, the Yankees wear the"Swoosh" on the front of their jerseys like all other clubs, marking the first appearance of a manufacturer's logo on a Yankees game jersey.
- In 2024, the Yankees quietly introduced a refresh to their iconic road grays—the first visual update in more than 50 years. The sleeve-end trim and white outlines around the "NEW YORK" lettering and back numbers were removed, returning the jersey to the minimalist, single-color aesthetic last seen in 1972. It marked a subtle but significant shift toward cleaner design while preserving the franchise's classic road look.
- Also in 2024, the Yankees doubled down on their resistance to modern uniform trends by opting out of MLB and Nike's City Connect uniform program. They were one of only two teams to abstain (the Athletics being the other, due to their pending relocation), further solidifying their role as baseball's most tradition-bound franchise.
- From 1970 to 2025, the Yankees have stayed defiantly traditional—no names on back, no wild alternates, and minimal design changes. Fabric updates and branding were adopted reluctantly, and even minor tweaks came slowly. In a sport full of reinvention, the Yankees' look remains baseball's ultimate constant. The result: a uniform legacy as timeless and unchanging as the franchise itself.

I am always looking for new information and better photographs. If you can share new information, or offer corrections to this material, please send a note to me, at gameworngeuides@gmail.com Please tell me which page you are referencing. All contributors will be recognized by name in a future edition.

© GameWornGuides.com

Year by Year Summary

Yankees Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1970	Home Flannel	No	Block 1 color	No	-	-	-	Spalding
	Road Flannel	No	Special Block 1 clr	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1971	Home Flannel	No	Special Block 1 clr	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Flannel	No	Block 1 color	No	-	-	-	Spalding
1972	Home Flannel	No	Special Block 1 clr	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Flannel	No	Special Block 1 clr	No	-	-	-	Spalding/Wilson
1973	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Yankee Stadium 50th	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Yankee Stadium 50th	-	Wilson
1974	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1975	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Block 2 color	No	-	-	-	Rawlings
1976	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1977	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1978	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1979	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Munson Armband (aft 8/2)	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Munson Armband (aft 8/2)	-	Wilson
1980	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Munson Armband	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Munson Armband	-	Wilson
1981	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Howard Armband	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Howard Armband	-	Wilson
1982	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1983	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1984	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1985	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Sheehy Armband (aft 8/14)	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Sheehy Armband (aft 8/14)	-	Wilson
1986	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Maris Armband	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Maris Armband	-	Wilson
1987	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1988	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1989	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Game Jerseys

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
1990	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	“1” for Billy Martin	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	“1” for Billy Martin	-	Wilson
1991	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Wilson
1992	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Russell
1993	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Russell
1994	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	MLB 125th	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	MLB 125th	Russell
1995	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Armband & 7 for Mantle after 8/13	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Armband & 7 for Mantle after 8/13	-	Russell
1996	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Mel Allen Armband (aft 6/18)	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Mel Allen Armband (aft 6/18)	-	Russell
1997	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	Jackie Robinson	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	Jackie Robinson	Russell
1998	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Russell
1999	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	DiMaggio 5, Catfish Hunter Armband (after 9/9)	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	DiMaggio 5, Catfish Hunter Armband (after 9/9)	-	Russell
2000	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Bob Lemon Armband	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Bob Lemon Armband	-	Russell
2001	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	WTC Armband after 9/11	AL 100th Anniv	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	WTC Armband after 9/11	AL 100th Anniv	Russell
2002	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Russell
2003	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Yankees 100th Anniv	-	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Yankees 100th Anniv	-	Russell
2004	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	RICOH patch*	Russell
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Russell
2005	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	Salvation Army Relief	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
2006	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
2007	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Lidle armband; “10” for Rizzuto (8/14 onward)	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Lidle armband;”10” for Rizzuto (8/14 on)	-	Majestic
2008	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Yankee Stadium Last season patch, Murcer armband July 13 on	All Star Patch	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Yankee Stadium Last season patch, Murcer armband July 13 on	All Star Patch	Majestic
2009	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	New Yankee Stadium Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	New Yankee Stadium Patch	-	Majestic
2010	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Houk armband from July 22, Steinbrenner patch, Sheppard Patch from July 16	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Houk armband from July 22, Steinbrenner patch, Sheppard Patch from July 16	-	Majestic
2011	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
2012	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
2013	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Mariano Rivera Patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
2014	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Derek Jeter patch	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
2015	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	“8” for Yogi Berra*	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	“8” for Yogi Berra*	-	Majestic

* Worn Opening series in Tokyo only for Hurricane Katrina, on or after September 1 and for a brief period thereafter.
 Patch worn the last home series of the season only
* Starting September 23 until season end.
 Starting September 7 until season end.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Game Jerseys

These two styles continue from previous years

2016-2019

Change to Flex Base

Below: 2020 home and road only to show addition of Nike Logo, the first time the Yankees have had a manufacturer logo on their jerseys, 33 years after the rest of MLB

Switch to Vapor Premiere Elite

Year	Style	Front Numbers	Back Numbers	NOB	Nameplate?	Left Sleeve	Right Sleeve	Manufacturer
2016	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	“8” for Yogi Berra	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	“8” for Yogi Berra	-	Majestic
2017	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Gene Michael Armband 	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Gene Michael Armband 	-	Majestic
2018	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Majestic
2019	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Mel Stottlemyre Armband	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Mel Stottlemyre Armband	MLB 150th Anniversary	Majestic
2020	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Hank Steinbrenner memorial	-	Nike
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Hank Steinbrenner memorial	-	Nike
2021	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	Whitey Ford memorial	-	Nike
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	Whitey Ford memorial	-	Nike
2022	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	-	-	Nike
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	-	-	Nike
2023	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡^	-	Nike
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡^	-	Nike
2024	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color (no perf)	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike
	Road Gray (refreshed)	No	Varsity 1 Color (no perf)	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike
	Home Navy Blue*	No	Varsity 1 Color (perf)	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike
	Road Navy Blue*	No	Varsity 2 Color (perf)	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike
2025	Home Pinstripe	No	Varsity 1 color	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike
	Road Gray	No	Varsity 1 Color	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike
	Home alt Navy Blue*	No	Varsity 1 Color	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike
	Road alt Navy Blue*	No	Varsity 2 Color	No	-	STARR Ad patch‡	-	Nike

‡ patch sleeve varies based on handedness of player

^ Starting July 21

* The Yankees added their Spring Training/BP jerseys as official alternates in the MLB Style Guide for the 2024 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

© GameWornGuides.com

Other Yankees Notes

The Yankees commitment to tradition is legendary. More than any other team in baseball they have refused to follow trends or fads, or make any changes to their on-field appearance

The Yankees have never strayed from a standard button-front jersey. No zippers, no pullovers, no wild colors, no changes… same basic home and road uniforms since 1936!

The Yankees first deviation from their standard uniform was to participate in a June 8, 1996 Negro Leagues tribute game against the Tigers in Detroit. They also played along with the Red Sox in 2012 for a Turn Back the Clock game to celebrate the centennial of the first game on the road at Fenway Park and participated in the inaugural Field of Dreams Game in 2021. Otherwise, no other throwbacks for the Yankees.

The Yankees first wore a sponsor advertising patch on their sleeves during the opening series of 2004 in Japan, for Ricoh, and a “Biofreeze” ad patch for the London Series in 2019. It was doubtlessly stipulated in a contract that they were required to in both cases.

Then, starting in 2013, the Yankees have joined other clubs in observing various holidays (Memorial Day, Independence Day, Mother’s and Father’s Days) with league-mandated special uniforms, and for promotions like Players Weekend.

Finally acquiescing to what was perhaps inevitable, the Yankees added manufacturer branding to their on-field jerseys when Nike assumed the MLB on-field uniform contract in 2020. Let the record show they staved off this event 33 years after branding first appeared on the sleeves of other MLB teams.

Because the changes in Yankees jerseys are so slight, in this section we will use a timeline at the start of the game uniform chapter to note the small changes that happened year by year, chronologically and allow easier navigation.

1936 Yankees – and 1994 Yankees. (“Dressed to the Nines," Baseball Hall of Fame Website)

Above: Plaque outside NYY Steak in Manhattan explains the origin of the team’s famous logo (M. Levin photo)

© GameWornGuides.com

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

Yankees Visual Jersey Timeline

To the casual observer, Yankees jerseys had remained unchanged for 55 years. But certainly, none of us here reading this are casual observers, and the small occasional changes the team has made to jerseys are worth noting. The interactive timeline below will be useful in navigating the many small changes that the Yankees have implemented. Clicking on each small event date below will take you to the page that explains it in context. To get back to this page, ensure that you have bookmarks open, and click on the “Visual Timeline” tab in the bookmarks bar.

© GameWornGuides.com

Overview: Yankees in Flannel Jerseys — 1970-1972

Yankees uniforms from 1970–1972 (and earlier) were made of wool-blend flannel. Home jerseys are woven with an integral navy chalk pinstripe. The now-familiar interlocked 'NY' first appeared on team sleeves in 1909, moved to the front of home jerseys in 1912, then disappeared from the jerseys (while remaining on the caps) for two decades after 1916. It returned for good in 1936. While the front 'NY' has changed slightly over the years in size and shape, the basic look — a white pinstriped, button-front jersey with the 'NY' on the left chest — has remained virtually unchanged since 1936, something of a record in professional sports.

Road jerseys were as plain as possible: gray bodies, no trim, and a block-font 'NEW YORK' arched in navy blue across the front. Player numbers are one color, navy blue, on back only.

From 1970–1972, original front crests and back lettering were made of woven twill, not felt. The edges were zig-zag stitched to the jersey. Through 1976, many Yankees jerseys were lettered with natural fiber-blend (cotton or Rayon) twill, rather than the 100% polyester common to most other teams. This fabric had a rougher appearance with a wider woven rib in the fabric texture, and this fabric tended to bleach to purple after repeated washings. The twill was often backed with muslin as a fabric stiffener/stabilizer before being cut and sewn. Tackle twill, by contrast, is nearly impossible to bleach and is sewn without a backing.

© GameWornGuides.com

1970-1972 Home Flannels

In 1970, the Yankees wore home jerseys made by Spalding. For 1971–1972, Wilson took over as the supplier of the team's home jerseys. Spalding had supplied the Yankees with uniforms for many years, but after 1972 they exited the Major League Baseball uniform supply market entirely.

Original, unaltered Yankees flannel jerseys are very difficult to find. The team tightly guarded its uniforms from collectors, and reissued nearly every uniform—star player or not—throughout its minor league system. In the minors, jerseys were often stripped of their front crests, numbers, or both, and re-lettered to match the specifications of the minor league club to which they were assigned—then worn until they fell apart. Many still exist in their minor league livery, with owners possibly unaware of their MLB heritage.

Above: A 1971 Yankees Wilson home jersey that I had restored to its original appearance.

Bottom right: In 1972, Yankees infielder Gene Michael guards second base in traditional flannels, contrasting with the visiting Tigers' brand-new pullover knits.

© GameWornGuides.com

1970-1972 Home Flannels, continued

1972

1972

1970

1971

When examining period game photos from the 1970–1972 period, one will notice the variety of weights of back numbers found on player jerseys. It appears that different batches of jerseys were lettered using different number sets, and that, over time, old and new uniform sets were simply mixed together and worn interchangeably on the field. This was a detail that teams did not seem concerned with at the time. 1971 jerseys are tail-tagged '1971,' while 1972 examples are tagged simply '72.'

© GameWornGuides.com

1970 Home

1970 marked the final year that longtime supplier Spalding produced Yankees home jerseys. Note the very bold back numbers. The lettering was made of natural fiber-blend woven twill—not the 100% synthetic tackle twill used by most other teams. When washed in harsh detergents, the lettering would turn shades of purple. Spalding blue with red and silver tag on the outside front tail, size tag sewn adjacent, chain stitched two-character year designation, “70” below. Wash instructions appeared on a separate tag with a flag tab indicating the year and the set number. Player names were hand chain-stitched onto a piece of felt, which was then straight-stitched into the back of the neck. Neck tag stitching was completed before the placket was sewn shut, meaning the stitching from the neck tag should not normally be visible from the outside back of the shirt.

© GameWornGuides.com

1971-1972 Home

Visually identical to the 1970 Spalding jersey, small rectangular Wilson tag on tail, hand chain stitched name in collar embroidered onto a piece of felt. The numbers are slightly less bold than those on the 1970 Spalding jerseys. These jerseys lack a separate washing instructions tag or a flag tag denoting the year and set number.

© GameWornGuides.com

1970-1972 Road Flannels

Pure tradition: Old-school, unwritten rules dictate that a team's road uniforms should show no flash—and following that rule, these could not be plainer. The design features unembellished, navy block "NEW YORK" lettering arched on the front, and plain numbers on the back with no player names. Original game photos show that the "NEW YORK" wordmark on Yankees road uniforms at the tail end of the flannel era (1970–1972) was slightly bolder than in earlier years.

However, a high percentage of surviving jerseys have been restored after their original lettering and numbers were stripped for minor league use. Once in the hobby, new—often inaccurate—lettering was cut and resewn. Original, unrestored flannel Yankees jerseys are extremely rare—especially road jerseys, which were almost always stripped of their "NEW YORK" lettering for minor league reassignment. The original lettering was a cotton twill blend, zig-zag stitched directly onto the jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

1970 Road

Imaged by Heritage Auctions, HA.com

Imaged by Heritage Auctions, HA.com

Imaged by Heritage Auctions, HA.com

Imaged by Heritage Auctions, HA.com

Wilson-made 1970 road jerseys feature a die-cut “NEW YORK” wordmark arched across the front. The letters were apparently laid out by hand, resulting in minor variations in arch and spacing. As mentioned earlier, original front lettering is uncommon, as most were re-purposed for minor league use and re-lettered. Wilson’s back numbers are plain but feature sharply angled corners, differing noticeably from the numbers used on home jerseys. Player tagging is hand chain-stitched onto a piece of jersey fabric (not felt), then zig-zag stitched onto the back of the neck—passing through only one layer, so the stitching remains invisible from the outside.

Imaged by Heritage Auctions, HA.com

Imaged by Heritage Auctions, HA.com

© GameWornGuides.com

1971-1972 Road

1971

1972

1972

The 1971–1972 road jerseys were made by Spalding and their numbers were a Block variant font, different from the Wilson jerseys. Spalding had long been the Yankees' sole uniform supplier, but after 1972, they exited the MLB uniform market entirely.

1972 tagging included a new white "Spalding Professional Made in U.S.A." label, with an adjoining navy year tag embroidered in silver thread, showing a two-digit year code. The neck tag featured the player's last name and a two-digit jersey size. These jerseys did not include a washing instructions tag or set numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

1973: Switch to Knits

The Yankees were among the last MLB teams to switch from flannel to knit uniforms, waiting until the 1973 season. Nearly all other teams had converted by 1972. Driven by tradition, the team's front office likely resisted the change.

A key consideration was the team's requirement that the new uniforms retain the look of the chalk pinstripes woven into the old wool flannel fabric. The team did not want the pinstripes to appear too sharp, crisp, or artificially printed. The result (inset, below)was satisfactory to the club, and beginning with the 1973 season, the Yankees took the field on Opening Day wearing double knits for the first time—home and road uniforms alike—all made by Wilson.

Visually, the new Wilson home uniforms appear virtually identical to the 1972 flannels—unsurprisingly. The stitched navy blue lettering remained cotton-blend twill (not 100% polyester tackle twill), consistent with what had been used on flannels in recent years.

The road gray uniforms were slightly modernized. They still featured block-arched "New York" lettering on the front, now in navy blue with a white outline. As their only nod to 1970s modernization, the road jerseys featured sleeve ends trimmed with 1" stretchy knit in a navy/white/navy pattern. This road uniform design remained virtually unchanged for the next 51 years, until a 2024 redesign removed the number outline and sleeve trim.

Wilson lined the inside of the button placket and collar with linen for player comfort. The linen lining was softer against the skin than the polyester seams and helped absorb perspiration.

Above, Ron Blomberg, 1973 regular season.

Above: An inside-out view of a Wilson-made Yankees double knit jersey shows the linen lining that encircles the inside of the placket.

Right: Billy Martin in road knits, Spring Training 1985.

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1980 Home

1975

1973

Player numbers changed to the Wilson house font now commonly known as 'Varsity.'. The Wilson Varsity font differs from earlier styles by featuring bottom feet, or 'serifs,' on the numbers 1, 2, 4, and 7. The interior openings on the numbers 0, 6, 8, and 9 are four-sided, without corner bevels (numbers from 1973 that I have measured are 7.4" tall. These started as 7½" numbers). 1974 through 1977, the (one-color) numbers are approximately 6.8" tall on surviving original examples, suggesting they were originally 7" tall before being shrunk after repeated washings.

Road jersey numbers added a ¼-inch white border around all sides. Keen observers will note that in 1977, taller 7.5" numbers were introduced. However, some jerseys still featured the earlier, smaller numbers—suggesting either that two numbering patterns were in use simultaneously or that, more likely, the team was using up old stock.

Notably, the numbers became taller but not wider, giving them a marginally narrower appearance.. Many older jerseys have had their back numbers replaced with later, taller versions during less-than-perfect restorations.

Top: I restored the front crest on this Lou Piniella jersey, it had been sent to Tacoma for a year of use in the minor leagues. The bottom jersey has had its front crest less exactly restored and its original sleeve patch replaced with a reproduction. Very few Yankees jerseys of the 1970s and 1980s escaped a second life in spring training and/or the minor leagues.

1980

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1980 Home, continued

1976

Player numbers were specified to be sewn 5½" below the collar—about half an inch higher than on most other teams' jerseys. The digits were typically spaced approximately 1½" apart, compared to the 1" spacing commonly used elsewhere.

On this well-worn example, with original crest and numbers intact, note how the lettering has been bleached to a deep violet color. The twill fabric used by the Yankees during these years appears to have contained natural fibers—likely a cotton blend—which reacted to chlorine bleach by turning purple in the wash. This bleaching effect is not typical of the 100% polyester tackle twill used by most other teams—or by the Yankees in later years.

© GameWornGuides.com

1978 Home Jersey Worn in 1979 and/or 1980

Below: 1978—Notice the proper style and location of the Wilson tag; correct team neck strip tag style.

This 1978 home jersey was issued to pitcher Don Gullett. 1978 marked Gullett's final season in baseball; yet, this jersey features a black armband on the left sleeve—something not worn by the Yankees that year. Black armbands were introduced following Thurman Munson's death on August 2, 1979, and were worn throughout the 1980 season.

Gullett retired after the 1978 season, and no Yankee roster player was issued #35 in either 1979 or 1980. The presence of the armband could be explained by the jersey being re-purposed—possibly worn by a coach, prepared for a call-up, or used during spring training. Gullett himself would not have worn the jersey with the armband in place. It was common practice for the Yankees to prepare and reissue jerseys as potential backups in subsequent seasons.

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1974, 1976-1980 Road

1977

Player numbers were specified to be sewn 5½" below the collar—approximately half an inch higher than the standard used by most other teams—and were typically spaced about 1½" apart, compared to the 1" spacing used by most other teams.

1976

1977

Notice the slight variation in Wilson tags on the two 1977 jerseys shown. That year marked a transition to a newer tag style, as seen on the Berra jersey—with serifs on the foot of the "4," a slightly bolder Wilson script, and a repositioned ® symbol.

© GameWornGuides.com

1975 Road

For reasons unknown, Rawlings supplied the Yankees' road jerseys only during the 1975 season. These jerseys differed slightly from their Wilson counterparts. The front "NEW YORK" wordmark used a shorter, squarer font with altered spacing and arch compared to the Wilson version. The back numbers used the Rawlings house font, which we now refer to as "Athletic Block." This font lacks the serifs (or "feet") seen on numerals like 1, 4, and 7 in the Wilson Varsity font.

Contemporary news photos show that some players occasionally wore earlier-issue Wilson jerseys on the field, identifiable by their differing number font. A red Rawlings tag appeared on the outside left front tail, accompanied by a flag tab indicating the set and year. The inside placket of these jerseys was not lined.

An embroidered player name strip tag was sewn into the back of the neck, using the distinctive stitching style ("handwriting") of the Rawlings stitcher, which differed from Wilson's. The Rawlings name tags were made from gray tackle twill with a slight sheen, in contrast to Wilson's use of matte gray jersey fabric.

Interestingly, a game photo has surfaced showing at least one player wearing a 1975-style Rawlings jersey in 1976.

Above: Catcher Rick Dempsey wears an earlier-issue Wilson jersey with a different back number font as he visits Rudy May on the mound, September 20, 1975.

Right: Catfish Hunter pitches in 1975 wearing a Rawlings-issued road jersey from that season.

© GameWornGuides.com

Team Lettering

Standard Yankees front crests and player number lettering were die-cut and supplied by the Liebe Company in St. Louis. While some teams economized by using a single die for the top layer of lettering—cutting the outlines by hand with scissors—the Yankees used dedicated dies to cut both the main color and the outlines.

Rectangular pieces of twill were stacked on the cutting platen, the “cookie cutter” die placed on top, and the hydraulic press activated—cutting all layers at once into identical letters and numbers. For authenticators, this means that original Yankees lettering from a given year should generally appear identical. Noticeable variations in lettering shape or size strongly suggest a re-lettering job.

Standard home jersey lettering was 7.5” tall, though surviving examples often measure slightly smaller—around 7.4”—due to wash shrinkage.

Note the style of the small Wilson manufacturer tag and its sewn location. The Wilson tag changed subtly over the years, as did its placement on the garment. Specific tag variations are addressed in the manufacturer tagging chapter and are not detailed here.

Photos with permission of the Liebe Company.

© GameWornGuides.com

1973-1976 Team Tagging

The Yankees consistently inventory-tagged their jerseys, though the location and format of the tagging varied by year—and often by jersey style (home or road). Jerseys lettered as “spares” at the start of the season, or later in the year for a traded player or call-up, often have different tagging conventions. Players were often reissued their less-used jersey from the previous season—home or road—to serve as a spare. Mid-season acquisitions often wore reissued spares originally assigned to another player in a previous year.

Jerseys issued from 1970–1980 typically featured an embroidered inventory strip tag sewn into the inside back of the neck. The embroidery was applied to a strip of matching jersey fabric (except on 1975 road jerseys) and zig-zag stitched into place. Authentic neck tagging should not show visible stitching on the outside back of the jersey. The inventory tag was sewn in during jersey construction, before the front placket was closed. If stitching from the tag passes through the collar and is visible on the back of the neck, the jersey should be viewed with suspicion.

Chain-stitched script was done freehand—non-automated—by skilled craftspeople using traditional chain stitch sewing machines. Experts can distinguish authentic chain stitching produced by the Wilson factory stitcher from imitations or contrived reproductions.

1975 road jerseys are unique and are covered separately on a previous page

1973 home jerseys commonly had name in collar and just year, or year and set number on the tail.

1973 road jerseys commonly had no tail tag

1974 home and road tagged identically

1975 home tagged the same style as 1974

1976 home jerseys commonly had name in neck and new style tail tag

1976 road jerseys commonly had no tail tag

© GameWornGuides.com

1977-1980 Team Tagging

For far longer than most other teams, the Yankees went to the trouble of embroidering the player's name and issue year into a strip tag sewn inside the neck of the jersey. As a result, Yankees jerseys typically lacked the standard "flag tags" sewn onto the manufacturer label, as was common for most other teams (the exception being 1975 road jerseys made by Rawlings).

Because the Yankees' uniforms changed little from year to year, it was common for older jerseys to remain in the trainer's room and later be reissued—sometimes with a number change—to a new player. A Yankees jersey with missing team tagging is almost always suspect, as tags did not simply "fall off," and later players had no reason to remove them. In most cases, jerseys with missing or altered tagging have been modified to obscure their true origin.

Two styles of tagging were used in 1977:

Player last name, year and set number in the collar with a plain tail; and last name only in the collar, with year and set number on the tail.

Beginning with the 1979 season, the National League asked its teams to add player names—at least to road uniforms—to help fans better follow the game. This created momentum for more teams to adopt names on jerseys, eventually influencing American League clubs as well.

Today, the standard across MLB is to include player names on all uniforms, and every other team has names on at least their road jerseys. The Yankees are the only team in MLB who have persisted with player numbers only and remain without player names on both home and road jerseys.

1978–1980: All tagging is on the neck strip, no team tagging on the tail.

© GameWornGuides.com

Sidebar: Yankees' Memorial Armbands

To mark the passing of former star players and other team associates—of which the Yankees have recognized many—the team has regularly worn plain black memorial armbands. When worn, these armbands appear on the left sleeve. A few especially significant individuals—such as DiMaggio and Mantle—have been commemorated with their uniform number stitched on the sleeve, either in place of the armband or in addition to it.

Examining game-worn Yankees jerseys for telltale stitch marks from removed armbands can provide clues as to whether a jersey was reissued in a later season or sent to the minor leagues. The example shown on this page is a case in point: evidence of armband removal from a jersey tagged for a season in which no memorial sleeve marking was worn.

Across different seasons, armbands were not always sewn in the exact same location on the sleeve—and even within the same year, small placement variations occurred from player to player. Especially when added mid-season, one can imagine clubhouse staff rushing to collect all uniforms, have the armbands sewn on, and return them to the team promptly. Game photos frequently reveal a lack of precision and consistency in armband placement.

A complete listing of sleeve memorials appears in the tables at the front of this chapter, with a nearly complete gallery of examples provided in a chapter ahead, "Commemorative Patches."

Shown here is a jersey with an armband in place, despite being tagged for a season in which no armband was worn. The most likely explanation is that Berra continued wearing this jersey into 1979, when the Thurman Munson memorial armband was added late in the season. The full authentication details can be viewed by clicking the thumbnail above.

© GameWornGuides.com

1981-1985 Home

The 1981 season marked a relatively minor, but notable, point of change. While Wilson remained the Yankees' sole uniform supplier, the spacing of the pinstripes on the home jerseys was adjusted. Before 1981, the stripes were spaced 1⅛" apart; starting in 1981, they were moved closer—just 1" apart.

The easiest way to spot the difference is by counting the pinstripes behind the "NY" crest on the chest: before 1981, the logo fits between five stripes; beginning in 1981, it fits between six.

1973-1980: 5 stripes = 5.65 " inches
1 1/8" between each stripe
Crest fits between 6 stripes

1981-2023: 5 stripes = 5 inches
1 inch between each stripe
Crest fits between 7 stripes

© GameWornGuides.com

1981-1985 Road

1981

1983

© GameWornGuides.com

1981-1985 Team Tagging

© GameWornGuides.com

1986-1987 Home

1986

At first glance, this appears to be Don Baylor's 1986 jersey. But it is not—and this is where research and proper authentication become essential. Baylor had played for the Yankees 1983–1985, and went to 1986 spring training with the Yankees before being traded to the Red Sox just two weeks prior to Opening Day. Meanwhile, Tommy John had just rejoined the Yankees after a previous stint with the team,1979–1982. Baylor's departure left John's preferred #25 jersey available for his use, and according to John himself, he assumed Baylor's jersey and wore it throughout the 1986 season.

The Wilson tail tag changes for 1986. The new tag was larger—measuring 2⅝ inches by 1⅞ inches—and fussier in design. Made of shiny satin-like polyester, it reads: "Tailored Exclusively for Prestige Teams by Wilson." It features the red Wilson script logo centered above four lines of washing instructions embroidered in black. A halftone, light pink "W" in a circle—Wilson's secondary logo—was also centered on the tag.
It's possible Wilson anticipated Rawlings becoming the official on-field uniform supplier for Major League Baseball in 1987, and designed the tag to imply that teams wearing Wilson uniforms did so by choice—favoring the company's tradition and quality.
Indeed, many players and collectors prefer the tailored fit of Wilson uniforms—often noting the linen lining inside the placket and neck for added comfort, along with the overall quality of the fabric, seams, buttons, and zippers. Flag tags indicating jersey size and any custom tailoring notes were pinch-sewn beneath the bottom or side edge of the new Wilson tag.

© GameWornGuides.com

1986-1987 Home, continued

1987

Above: The neck tagging on the jersey shown above differs from the examples presented at left as "typical" for 1986–1987. Click the link below for further insight into this variation.

© GameWornGuides.com

1986-1987 Road

1987

On this team-issued 1987 jersey, note the original—but slightly crooked—back numbers, a detail not uncommon for the era. These were placed and stitched by hand, often under tight deadlines.

© GameWornGuides.com

1988-1991 Home/Road

Wilson remained the Yankees' uniform supplier during this period, but the team's inventory strip-tagging style changed. The elegant, hand-embroidered chain stitching previously done by skilled individuals was replaced by computerized machine embroidery in a cursive script. The stitching was still applied to a strip of matching jersey fabric and zig-zag stitched into the back of the neck.

As before, authentic neck tagging should not show stitching on the outside back of the jersey, since the tag was sewn in place before the placket was closed during construction.

The format of the inventory code remained consistent from 1988–1991, and was the same for both home and road jerseys. Always compare with other examples from the same year to confirm consistency. While it is not impossible for a late-season Wilson factory jersey to have been produced and sent to the team with slightly different tagging, such occurrences are undocumented, rare, and should be approached with caution during authentication.

1991

1988

Above: This jersey features team-applied replacement numbers, likely added for spring training use. Click on the letter of opinion for further details.

© GameWornGuides.com

1988-1991 Team Tagging

Player names in the neck remained, but were now sewn in an automated, machine-generated cursive script—a style of tagging that continued through 1991.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2004 Home

Rawlings' five-year contract as Major League Baseball's official uniform supplier ended after the 1991 season, with Russell Athletic winning the business. Like Rawlings, Russell's deal did not require teams to use them as a supplier. However, clubs that did so displayed the Russell logo on the right sleeve, and Russell gained exclusive rights to market newly branded "Diamond Collection" on-field specification jerseys through an expanded network of retail outlets.

In 1992, after 16 exclusive seasons with Wilson, the Yankees switched to Russell. One notable change accompanying the transition was in jersey construction: prior to 1992, Yankees jerseys featured seven evenly spaced buttons from top to bottom. Starting with Russell's involvement, the design shifted to six buttons. The top two buttons were placed close together, while a five-inch gap separated the second and third buttons from the top—a detail easily spotted in game photos.

Yet the Yankees were granted a major exception not extended to any other team: while Russell manufactured the team's on-field uniforms, they were not allowed to display their logo anywhere publicly visible. Russell tagging appeared only on the hidden outside left tail of the jersey—there was no embroidered "R" logo on the sleeve, as seen on other teams.

The Yankees cited an exclusive branding and marketing agreement with Adidas that they claimed superseded MLB's league-wide uniform contract. In fact, in 1997, the Yankees and Adidas jointly filed a lawsuit against Major League Baseball, seeking to maintain full control over the team's trademarks. That same March, the Yankees and Adidas signed a $95 million sponsorship deal—one that deliberately excluded Major League Baseball Properties.

Pre-1992: seven evenly spaced buttons.

1992 and later: six unevenly spaced buttons.

Russell Retail-Sale Diamond Collection Authentics

Retail-sold Yankees Authentics differ from on-field-issued jerseys in two key ways: they feature an embroidered "R" logo on the sleeve end and a size tag sewn into the neck.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2004 Home, continued

This is a strong example of a Russell-issued, on-field Yankees jersey. Note the six unevenly spaced buttons, in contrast to Wilson jerseys, which featured seven evenly spaced buttons. I have examined this jersey for authentication purposes and determined that it was used during the regular season, then later updated with a World Series patch on the sleeve to serve as a potential "spare" for postseason use. Click the letter of opinion on the right to see it full sized.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2004 Home, continued

2001

The MLB silhouetted batter logo patch was added to the back of the collar on all MLB game jerseys beginning in 2000. From 2000–2009 the Yankees' version featured red, white, and blue. In 2010, the colors changed to blue, white, and silver-gray.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2004 Road

Derek Jeter's 1995 Road Jersey: His First MLB Jersey

Left: Enhanced image reveals the remnants of the removed #7 memorial and black armband on this 1994 Bernie Williams jersey. Both were likely taken off following the 1995 season, presumably so the jersey could be reused during 1996 spring training—a common practice at the time.

I was able to authenticate this jersey and confirm that it was, in fact, the first one issued to Derek Jeter during the 1995 season. In typical Yankees fashion, the jersey was re-purposed—originally issued to teammate Bernie Williams as a 1994 road jersey. In addition to the visible ghosting from Williams' back number, the jersey shows clear signs of the removed 1994 MLB 125th Anniversary sleeve patch and the black memorial armband worn that season.

Click the document thumbnail below to view the full letter of authentication.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2004 Road, continued

1995

1995

Yankees jerseys in 1995 began the season with plain sleeves, but following the mid-season passing of Mickey Mantle on August 13, a black armband and his retired #7 were added to the left sleeve of both home and road jerseys.

2003

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2004 Road, continued

2000

Left: Many Yankees jerseys from the 2000 season feature an unusually simple team tag marked "YO," which is believed to stand for "Year 2000." Fewer examples are tagged with the full "2000" designation.

Also beginning in 2000, the MLB silhouetted batter logo patch was added to the back of the collar on all game jerseys. For the Yankees, the patch featured red, white, and blue from 2000 through 2009, before transitioning to blue, white, and silver-gray in 2010.

During the 2000 season, Russell Athletic also phased out its "Diamond Collection" tagging. As remaining stock was used up, the new "Authentic Collection" tags—such as the one shown on this example—began appearing on jerseys.

YANKEES-STEINER COLLECTIBLES

Yankees – Steiner Collectibles
Letter of Authenticity

Congratulations on the acquisition of your Yankees – Steiner Collectible!

Memorabilia: 2000 Ramiro Mendoza#55 Game Used WS Road Jersey

The authenticity of this Yankees - Steiner memorabilia is unconditionally guaranteed, and the undersigned certifies that it was obtained as part of the Yankees - Steiner Collectibles Program, a direct partnership between the New York Yankees Baseball Club and Steiner Sports Memorabilia.

On behalf of the Yankees - Steiner partnership, we hope that you enjoy the addition of this amazing item to your collection.

Sincere regards,

Brandon Steiner
Chairman and CEO
Yankees – Steiner Collectibles

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-2004 Team Tagging

Russell's team inventory tagging differed significantly from Wilson's. Instead of a strip tag sewn into the neck, Russell jerseys featured a colorful "Diamond Collection" tag sewn onto the outside left tail, with the jersey size embroidered directly into the tag itself.

Just below this tag was a white square of mylar-like plastic fabric, onto which team inventory codes were stitched. The format of these codes varied from year to year—sometimes including a player's name or number, and other times omitting them entirely. As shown here, the nomenclature was inconsistent even between players in the same season, possibly reflecting different uniform sets.

Additionally, separate and distinct set tagging was often used for postseason jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

Left: Note that the final two 1996 examples have Russell tags that feature the earlier “flat-angled” Diamond Collection script logo commonly used in 1992–1993. This version had been replaced by a more steeply sloped design in subsequent years.

While the reason for its reappearance is unclear, the most likely explanation is that an old batch of tags was retrieved from storage and used on the production line.

© GameWornGuides.com

The MLB “Silhouetted Batter” logo patch was added to the back of the collar on all on-field game uniforms beginning in 2000.The Yankees’ initial version (2000–2009) featured a navy, white, and red color scheme, which changed to navy, white, and gray in 2010. Russell tail tagging also transitioned in 2000, moving from the older “Diamond Collection” branding to the new “Authentic Collection” style. However, 2000 was a transitional year, and older tags continued to appear until existing stock was depleted.

By 2002, a subtle update to the Russell tag moved the ® symbol from the first line to the second. Even so, some jerseys still showed the earlier tag style, again due to use of leftover inventory.

For a more detailed breakdown, see the Manufacturer Tagging chapter.

Above: Silhouetted Batter back-of-collar tag, with the red-white-blue colors used 2000–2009.

2000

2001

2002

2003

2004

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2019 Home/Road

Majestic replaced Russell as the official on-field uniform supplier for Major League Baseball in 2005. The Yankees transitioned to Majestic as their uniform manufacturer that season, but the same branding policy remained in effect: no visible Majestic logo appeared on game-worn Yankees jerseys, and sleeves remained blank.

However, retail versions of “Authentic Collection” jerseys—made to on-field specifications—did include the Majestic logo on the left sleeve. All Yankees jerseys through the 2013 season continued to be made from full-weight double-knit fabric.

2005

2005

© GameWornGuides.com

1980, 2009, 2020: Numbers Change Slightly

1973–1979

1980–2008

2009–2019

2020–2023 reverts to 1980–2008 style pattern

Admittedly, these changes are subtle—likely imperceptible to most observers. But for authenticators, they represent critical details.

While the player number font on Yankees jerseys may appear unchanged over the decades, it has in fact evolved—becoming proportionally taller over time before reverting to a shorter height in 2020. For example, the one-color number "4" has consistently remained approximately 5⅜" wide, but the varying heights—overlaid in color above—show how the font appeared progressively skinnier as it grew taller without increasing in width.

- Wilson (1973–1979): 6¾" tall (tan silhouette)
- Wilson/Russell/Majestic (1980–2008): 7⅜" tall (blue silhouette)
- Majestic (2009–2019): 7⅞" tall (black silhouette)
- Nike (2020–2023): 7⅜" tall again

Full examples of these font variations appear on the road jerseys shown at left.

In the 1970s especially, inconsistencies in number size and shape were not uncommon. Before computer-stored patterns and laser-cut lettering, it was typical to find earlier-style numbering on later jerseys due to manual cutting and varied die usage.

The font change introduced by Majestic in 2009 appears to have gone largely unnoticed. It is unclear whether the change was intentional or inadvertent. Interestingly, it mirrored a similar adjustment made to Detroit Tigers numbers around the same time—perhaps reflecting Majestic's effort to standardize number fonts across teams and streamline production.

© GameWornGuides.com

Road Wordmark Variations

Narrow Outline used 1973–1974, 1976, 1990–2018

1975 Rawlings Variant

Thick Outline Style used 1977–1989

Narrow Outline "Kiss Cut" with outline on top, 2019–2023

Single color, 2024–2025

For those with an obsessively close eye for detail, there have been subtle variations in the Yankees' road jerseys during the double-knit era—specifically in the thickness of the white outline around the "NEW YORK" wordmark.

The most noticeable differences appear in the splits of the letters N and W. When the white outline is thicker, the interior splits in those letters do not extend as deeply. The measurable difference between the thinner and thicker outlines? Approximately 3/32 of an inch.

- 1973–1976 (Wilson): Generally features a narrow white outline.
- 1975 (Rawlings): Slightly different lettering (note the "W"); still a narrow outline, with wider letter spacing.
- 1977–1989 (Wilson): Generally features a thick white outline.
- 1990–1991 (Wilson): Returns to a narrow outline.
- 1992–2004 (Russell): Narrow outline maintained.
- 2005–2018 (Majestic): Continues with narrow outline.
- 2019 (Majestic) / 2020–2023 (Nike): Uses narrow kiss-cut outline, with the white layer sewn on top of the navy base.
- 2024–2025 (Nike): Transitions to a one-color wordmark, returning to the style last used in 1972.

© GameWornGuides.com

Road Wordmark Variations, continued

1973–1991: 7 buttons (1979 example shown)

1993–2000: With tight spacing, 6 buttons

2001–2015: Typically with medium spacing, 6 buttons

1995 example with wide spacing

As with the home jersey, the Yankees' road jerseys featured seven evenly spaced buttons from top to bottom prior to 1992. However, with Russell's takeover as uniform supplier in 1992, the design changed to six buttons, and the spacing of the top three buttons differed from the rest. The top two buttons are placed close together, followed by a five-inch gap between the second and third buttons.

This wider gap allowed for some variation in the placement of the "NEW YORK" wordmark, as it no longer had to contend with button alignment. On smaller jersey sizes, the "Y" often appears nearly centered on the placket. On larger sizes, the "Y" may shift farther to the left, contributing to minor but noticeable inconsistencies in layout.

2016–2023: Returns to tight spacing; six buttons

© GameWornGuides.com

Changes in Application of MLB “Silhouetted Batter”

2000–2009

2010–2015

2016–2025

- When it comes to Yankees uniform changes, one must look closely—sometimes very closely—to spot distinctions from year to year.
- One such subtle change involves the MLB “Silhouetted Batter” logo, introduced to the back collar of all on-field jerseys beginning in 2000. From 2000 to 2009, the Yankees used the logo in navy, white, and red.
- In 2010, the logo was updated to navy, white, and gray. Interestingly, the Yankees had briefly used a navy/gray version of the logo on apparel as far back as 1996, though this predated its application to on-field jerseys.
- As a footnote: In the 1990s, prior to the league-wide collar patch, the Yankees used two versions of the silhouetted batter logo on their outerwear jackets—one in navy/white/silver, and another in silver/white/navy

© GameWornGuides.com

2005-2024 Team Tagging

On this page—Tagging (2005–2011): During this period, Majestic used a standardized team tagging system for all jerseys—home and road alike. The tagging consists of a simple flag tag pinched beneath the front locker tag, sometimes accompanied by player-specific tailoring tags. Unlike earlier eras, no additional information (such as set numbers, player names, or player numbers) was included on the team tag.

Only some jerseys from this period are labeled with an MLB Authentication Program hologram. Many—but not all—team-issued jerseys also bear a Steiner Sports serialized authentication sticker, while in some cases, players provided their own authenticated jerseys.

Starting in 2011, a Yankees serialized barcode sticker was added beneath the locker tag.

© GameWornGuides.com

Below: All three of these are 2012—Note that the first one uses a "left over" Majestic tag with the rounded M.

2013

2014

2014

2015

2016

2016

2017

Above: 2018—barcode tag was added inside the bottom of the button placket on team-issued jerseys. The scannable QR code typically replicates the information printed in English just to its left.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019

2020

2021

2022 (Jackie Robinson Day example)

2023

2024

© GameWornGuides.com

2014: Cool Base Option—Road Jerseys Only

Majestic introduced its new tech-fabric "Cool Base" jerseys to Major League Baseball for the 2006 season, a development covered in detail earlier in this book. The Yankees initially resisted the adoption of this lighter, moisture-wicking uniform style and did not implement it until 2014—and then only for road jerseys.

Even at that point, Cool Base jerseys were issued only to players who specifically requested them. The remainder of the roster continued to wear traditional full-weight double-knit jerseys. Home uniforms were never offered in the Cool Base style, and while no official reason was publicly stated, insider discussions at the time suggested several concerns:

- The template construction interrupted the iconic pinstripes with vented side panels and underarm inserts that did not carry the striping pattern.
- The appearance of the pinstripes in the new mesh weave was reportedly unsatisfactory to the organization. Unlike the jagged-edged "engineered look" first approved when the Yankees switched to knits in 1973, the Cool Base version appeared inconsistent with the team's long-established aesthetic standards.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Road Comparison: Full-Weight vs. Cool Base

2014 Cool Base, first year of offering

2014 regular full-weight knit, still worn in 2014 by a majority of players

© GameWornGuides.com

2016–2023: Switch to Flex Base Template

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

Above: Note the absence of mesh side panels and the precise sleeve stripe alignment—both design elements specifically mandated by the Yankees.

The Yankees did not fully adopt the league-wide uniform update until 2016, when all MLB teams transitioned to Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field jerseys. These jerseys retained the Cool Base fabric but introduced several design upgrades to improve breathability and reduce weight. Key features included mesh side panels running the length of the jersey, a mesh tail panel called the "Air Belt", and a rubberized MLB logo patch on the back collar (marketed by Majestic as CFX). In addition, a new heat-pressed tag replaced the previous Cool Base woven tagging on the front tail.

Given the Yankees' longstanding attention to uniform tradition, Majestic made specific accommodations to preserve the team's iconic pinstripe look. The company developed a zig-zag patterned pinstripe that met team specifications, even though it was no longer "engineered"—that is, no longer woven through to the reverse side of the fabric. (Yankee double-knit jerseys had long been distinguishable by the fact that pinstripes were visible on both the front and back of the cloth.)

To maintain stripe alignment and aesthetic integrity, Majestic constructed the home jerseys with raglan-style sleeves to avoid shoulder stripe misalignment. They also eliminated the mesh side panels on the Yankees' home jerseys, which had been a standard part of the Flex Base design for other teams, as those panels would have interrupted the pinstripe pattern.

While Nike became MLB's official uniform provider in 2020, they continued using the Majestic Flex Base jersey template, fabric, and even Majestic's manufacturing facilities through (at least) the 2023 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016–2023: Switch to Flex Base Template, continued

Above: New style of sewn-on knit sleeve end trim.

Below: Earlier sewn-in knit style.

Beginning with the 2016 Flex Base road jerseys, the Yankees modified the wordmark spacing, tightening the layout across the chest. In line with the league-wide transition, the team also adopted “Kiss Cut” lightweight layering for both front wordmarks and back numbers—a technique Majestic claimed reduced weight by 10–20% compared to traditional layered twill. (See Chapter 2 for more details.)

The road jerseys also feature raglan-style sleeves, but unlike the home jerseys, they retain the vented mesh side panels, a standard element of the Flex Base template. On gray road jerseys, these vented panels and the sewn-on vented tail piece are far less visible than they are on pinstriped home jerseys.

Finally, the sleeve end trim underwent a construction change: starting in 2016, it was sewn on top of the sleeve fabric as an adornment. This differs from the earlier method, in use since 1973, where the trim was a separately sewn piece forming the sleeve end itself.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020: Nike Becomes On-Field Uniform Provider

First Manufacturer Logos on On-Field Yankees Jerseys

2020 marked a major shift in MLB uniforms, as Nike became the Official Uniform Supplier for both on-field and retail authentic jerseys, taking over from Majestic. Although the 2020 Yankees jerseys appear nearly identical to their 2019 Majestic predecessors, there was one immediately visible change: the Nike “Swoosh” logo now appears on the front right chest—a first for Yankees game uniforms.

As readers of this guide know, the Yankees had never previously allowed any manufacturer logos on their on-field jerseys (though such logos had appeared on batting practice gear). But in 2020, Nike—arguably the only American sports brand larger than the Yankees—broke through that long-standing tradition.

The change was controversial. It sent Yankee purists into a tailspin, and even Yankee haters were up in arms. Still, it reflected a broader shift in professional sports branding, where prominent sponsor logos have become the norm—NBA jerseys now feature corporate patches, and European football kits have long been saturated with ads.

In a more subtle change, Nike revised the Yankees’ player number font, reducing it to the pre-2009 height. (Majestic had made the numbers taller and narrower beginning in 2009.) While the 2020 Nike font closely resembles the older style, there are minor differences in stroke weight and proportion—the new font is slightly thinner and not an exact replica of the earlier one.

Otherwise, the 2020 Yankees jerseys are structurally identical to late-era Majestic Flex Base designs. They retain:

- The same zig-zag “engineered” pinstripes
- Raglan sleeves
- No side vent panels (unlike other teams’ versions)
- Even the patent number on the inside manufacturer tag is unchanged from 2019

Yet despite these similarities, the presence of the Swoosh marks a symbolic end of an era—the Yankees’ historic holdout against uniform branding has officially ended.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Home

Aside from the new tail tagging and the Nike Swoosh on the chest, the Nike jersey shell remains identical to the 2019 Majestic Flex Base design.

Left: The Nike 2020 inside seam style tag. Right: Its Majestic Flex Base counterpart. Note that both tags reference the same U.S. patent number, underscoring the continuity in jersey construction.

In terms of lettering, player number fonts were reduced in height by ½ inch, returning to 7 3/8”, the same as pre-2009 sizing. However, the new numbers are slightly less bold than earlier versions, reflecting a standardized font now shared by the Yankees, Tigers, and Braves.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Road

As with the home jerseys, the 2020 Yankees Nike road jerseys are functionally identical to the 2019 Majestic versions, with only a few subtle changes: a slightly smaller, lighter-stroke number font, and the addition of Nike-branded tail tagging and the Swoosh logo on the chest.

The sleeve-end trim continues to be sewn on, consistent with prior Flex Base styling. A black “HGS” memorial patch was worn in 2020 on the left sleeve to honor the passing of team co-owner Hank Steinbrenner.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020–2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Home

The Yankees are a tradition-bound team, and the switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in almost no changes to their classic home jersey. The most visible change for most teams is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Yankees have no names on back, and they choose not to standardize their back numbers. VPE also has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the knit trim around the neck and down the placket appears closer together than it once had for other teams. The Yankees have no such adornment, so it makes no difference. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. Aside from the slightly lower MLB logo on the back collar, (and the loss of the Flex Base mesh "air belt" that can't be seen on-field anyway) these are almost identical to their previous jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Road

The Yankees are a tradition-bound team, though they do decide to make changes to their road jerseys in 2024, but not because of the switch to Vapor Premier Elite (VPE). Instead, the team opts to remove the sleeve-end trim and white outlines from all lettering, making a final product that is as plain as it can be. Otherwise, the only (barely) discernible changes with the new VPE template are the redundant band of jersey-color trim around the neck opening and the lower MLB logo on the back of the neck. Numbers are not perforated on this style. It is almost as if the Yankees rebel against the supposed advances in jersey technology and go back in time to how their jerseys looked in the pre-1973 flannel era.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Home/Spring Training Home

For 2024, the Yankees include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or BP, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2024.

That said, the switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in almost no visible changes to this style. The most prominent change for most teams is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Yankees have no names on back, and they choose not to standardize their back numbers. VPE also has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the knit trim around the neck and down the placket appears closer together than it once had for other teams. The Yankees have no such adornment, so it makes no difference. Otherwise, the only (barely) discernible changes with the new VPE template are the redundant band of jersey-color trim around the neck opening and the lower MLB logo on the back of the neck. They do opt for perforated numbers, which don't appear on their regular home and road jerseys, perhaps as an antidote to the Florida heat.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 Alternate Road/Spring Training Road

For 2024, the Yankees include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or BP, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2024.

That said, the switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in almost no visible changes to this style. The most prominent change for most teams is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Yankees have no names on back, and they choose not to standardize their back numbers. VPE also has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the knit trim around the neck and down the placket appears closer together than it once had for other teams. The Yankees have no such adornment, so it makes no difference. Otherwise, the only (barely) discernible changes with the new VPE template are the redundant band of jersey-color trim around the neck opening and the lower MLB logo on the back of the neck. They do opt for perforated numbers, which don't appear on their regular home and road jerseys, perhaps as an antidote to the Florida heat.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. The Yankees, of course, had no player names and they did not standardize or perforate their numbers, so they remain the same as 2024, and before. The team's ad patch is updated for 2025 as well. The jersey has the new-for-2025 white Nike jock tag, which is used on a handful of jerseys around the league.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in, though the Yankees no longer have such trim on their road jerseys, so it is moot. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. Like other 2025 jerseys, gray jerseys also have back name and numbers enlarged, in most cases back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. The Yankees, of course, had no back names and they did not standardize or perforate their numbers, so they remain the same as 2024, and before. The team’s ad patch is updated for 2025 as well.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Home/Spring Training Home

Once again in 2025, the Yankees include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or BP, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2025. The changes from the 2024 version are few. The jersey itself appears the same, and since the Yankees have no back names and did not standardize their numbers, there's nothing to revert to pre-2024 standards, so they appear much the same as in 2024 and before. The only real updates are that back numbers are no longer perforated and the team's ad patch changes for 2025.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Alternate Road/Spring Training Road

Once again in 2025, the Yankees include both of their blue alternate jerseys, which they only wear in Spring Training or BP, in the MLB Style Guide. Given that the team has no other alternates, this may have been forced on them as a way to keep these two outlier jerseys in their rotation. We document them here because they are made available for the team to use in 2025. The changes from the 2024 version are few. The jersey itself appears the same, and since the Yankees have no back names and did not standardize their numbers, there's nothing to revert to pre-2024 standards, so they appear much the same as in 2024 and before. The only real updates are that back numbers are no longer perforated and the team's ad patch changes for 2025.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Jerseys and the Minor Leagues

From their founding through the late 1990s, the Yankees were—oddly and obsessively—protective of their team-issued jerseys, refusing to make them available to fans while simultaneously passing them down to the minor leagues for continued use, even those belonging to superstar players. As a result, it is rare to find pre-2000 Yankees game-worn jerseys that were not reassigned to the minors. Many had their numbers removed and replaced, front crests stripped off, and team tagging altered or eliminated altogether.

To meet the growing demand from a collectibles-hungry fanbase, unscrupulous "entrepreneurs" created a shadow market of counterfeit Yankees game-worn jerseys, duping buyers with fabricated or poorly restored pieces.

In 2005, Steiner Sports (later acquired by Fanatics) signed a formal agreement with the Yankees to market game-used memorabilia—including jerseys, bats, balls, and stadium seats. This move was widely welcomed by fans, as it finally offered a legitimate, trusted channel for acquiring authentic Yankees gear.

As an authenticator, I've encountered a staggering number of counterfeit and poorly restored Yankees jerseys over the years. But I've also had the privilege of helping restore some extraordinary pieces to their original glory.

Top row: Chris Chambliss' 1977 road jersey was unceremoniously reassigned to the Yankees' Oneonta (NY) minor league affiliate. Bottom left: Mid-restoration of the Chambliss jersey reveals three sets of lettering ghosts on the front—only one of which is original. Above: The back numbers on this MLB gamer originally worn by Charlie Lau were sloppily replaced, the front crest removed, and then crudely "restored" in a later attempt.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Jerseys and the Minor Leagues, continued

Here is a set of “before and after” of a 1976 Thurman Munson jersey I had restored. It was sent down to the minors, regardless of Munson’s star status, and converted to a Tacoma Yankees minor league jersey for 1978. The crest was removed from the front and the numbers on back were both changed, from 25 to 15. In restoration, everything was removed, and the light table revealed the jersey’s past. Replacement lettering was cut, aged to match the patina of the shirt it was being sewn to, and was stitched in place using bleach-faded thread. The unrestored jersey was filthy and brightened considerably after a professional cleaning. Luckily, the original team tagging including the “Munson” neck tag was left in place. This is unfortunately not always the case.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Jerseys and the Minor Leagues, continued

Steve Kraljic Collection

"Misrepresented" Game Worn Yankees Jerseys

The Yankees' resistance to selling retail team-spec authentic jerseys to fans (at least prior to Rawlings' retail authentic jersey contract in 1987) or game worn player jerseys at any time prior to the 2000s has contributed to a significant counterfeit market for these goods. While Wilson, the team's on-field provider was not authorized to sell Yankees crested jerseys to anyone but the team for its own use, they did offer the Navy chalk-pinstripe style jersey as a blank to authorized sporting goods dealers with whom they were affiliated. Some of these jerseys were lettered with the Yankees front crest without authorization, simply to fill a strong demand from rabid fans. Doubtlessly most of these were meat to be worn, signed, or simply displayed, but some found their way into the hobby represented as team-issued jerseys or have been represented as game worn. I have seen more than a few, to be kind.

Additionally, each year the MLB Yankees ordered a quantity of extra jerseys to be used for call-ups, trades, or emergencies should a player uniform be damaged in a game. Often these jersey were team-tagged differently than this made for the roster players at the start of the season— perhaps just with a year of issue designation. It is not uncommon to see these jerseys offered for sale with famous player numbers on them, being represented as game worn by their current owners. Therefore, knowing the team tagging details for each year are so important to any knowledgeable collector.

Finally, many Yankees jerseys circulate in the hobby that were almost certainly game used, but originated as minor league issues, or as MLB jerseys issued to and worn by other, less-famous players, and they have been customized to wear the numbers of star players. Very frequently the neck or tail tagging that had been on these jerseys is no longer present, and the claim is often made that it "fell off". I can assure you that, except for some extremely heavily worn flannels, player tagging does not "fall off"; it is generally removed because it does not match what an owner wanted it to say. These sorts of deceptions happen with every team's jerseys, but is more endemic with the Yankees because of the team's popularity and the earlier heavily controlled access to team-issued equipment.

From my archives, a blank, Wilson team-issued and year tagged 1991 Yankees home jersey, accompanied by a Steiner letter certifying its authenticity as a Yankees team issued blank. There is absolutely nothing wrong with this.. until someone buys it and turns it into a "team issued" Don Mattingly jersey. There are people who make a business of such deception, unfortunately.

© GameWornGuides.com

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1979-1982 Batting Practice

The very first Yankees batting practice jerseys were crew necks, rather than the later V-neck styles. Based on available evidence, they appear to have debuted in the 1979 season. The Majestic tag on this particular example dates it to the 1980–1982 period.

These are solid-fabric, lightweight jerseys—not mesh—and feature sewn-on twill lettering with no trim.

Due to a lack of reliably dated photos of Yankees warm-ups from this era, it's entirely possible that these early crew-neck jerseys and the V-neck styles shown on the following pages were worn concurrently on the field.

Top left: 1981 Perry baseball card using a 1980 photo.
Right: Reggie Jackson photo, dated 1979.

© GameWornGuides.com

1981-1992 Batting Practice

Wilson, Roman Sport, and Sand-Knit all manufactured Yankees batting practice jerseys beginning in the late 1970s. Despite the different manufacturers, they all share a common construction detail: a horizontal seam across the upper chest.

Standard features across all versions:

- No names on the back
- No trim on sleeve ends
- One-color white Varsity numbers

Details by manufacturer:

Wilson (#69): Features all sewn-on logos and numbers, representing an early production effort.

Roman Sport (#26, 1983 mesh model): Uses a non-standard Varsity number font (note the “2”), and a slightly bolder NY logo compared to Wilson’s version (see far right column).

Sand-Knit (#60, tagged 1983–1984): All lettering and logos screen-printed in Sand-Knit’s Varsity style.

© GameWornGuides.com

1979-1992: Batting Practice Variations

Pre-1986, Wilson V-neck mesh pull-over with flat tails, as early as 1979

1986–1988 Wilson mesh crew neck (rounded collar) with flat tails

The Wilson tagging on this two-button mesh Henley suggests early 1990s

© GameWornGuides.com

Early-Mid 1990s Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

Left: The large "Diamond Collection" patch on the sleeve appears to be part of a launch promotion and were not present on team issued gear.

Majestic made these zip-neck, elastic waist warm-up jerseys and offered them to all teams. Its official style name was "The GameWarmer." A few teams picked it up, issued them to players, even numbering them on back. Others issued them blank to players who asked. Many seemed to have not used them at all. With the "Diamond Collection" patch on the sleeve, this jersey is likely a retail sale item or even an early factory sample. Steiner Sports reports that the Yankees issued a set of these to the team in 1990 (see photos of Deion Sanders wearing one in 1990), though they tell me those issued to the team were made by Starter. Notice the different sleeve end trim.

© GameWornGuides.com

1993-1996 Batting Practice

1992 or 1993

Navy blue mesh, knit white/navy stripes added at the sleeve ends

Russell uses two-button pullover Henley neck design. Majestic uses V-neck design. Both probably used interchangeably “NY” logo on the front is slightly bolder than game jerseys.

Numbers on the back are white Varsity, no NOB.

1993 or 1994

© GameWornGuides.com

1997-2000 Batting Practice

Appears nearly identical to the prior version except the jersey is a mesh fabric full button front design.

The black disc with the white 5 in the center is the 1999 Joe DiMaggio memorial.

MLB Silhouetted Batter logo appears on back collar in 2000.

On these examples, note the Majestic logo—embroidered in navy blue thread to render it virtually invisible on television.

Far left: The Yankees, by contractual agreement, do not display manufacturer branding on their game uniforms, but apparently undershirts are exempt from this rule.

Right: observe the nearly imperceptible black armband worn in memory of Bob Lemon, as well as the blacked-out Majestic logo on the 2000 batting practice jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000-2001 Spring Training Home

Top: The jersey is claimed to be Jeter spring training 2000 or 2001. I cannot be sure this is actually his, but it has the back-of-the-collar Batterman logo as was started in 2000.

Bottom: Jersey said to have been issued to pitcher Denny Neagle.

Photos from 2000 Spring Training reveal that many Yankees players were still wearing the two-button Henley-style batting practice jersey—a style that had last been officially issued in 1996. Multiple images of manager Joe Torre show him alternating between this older Henley version and the newer full-button front style.

Left: Coaches Lee Mazzilli and Willie Randolph are pictured together, each wearing a different style jersey. This highlights how, particularly Spring Training, things are not always… "uniform."

While in-season photos of Yankees wearing their warm-ups are more difficult to find, it appears that some players continued to wear this Henley style even during the regular season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000 Spring Training Road

Prior to the 10th Edition, we had included this jersey as an oddball; a “phantom” that existed only as a rarely seen retail item with Authentic tagging, but was not worn on field. However, recently uncovered photographs have confirmed that it was indeed worn as a road jersey during 2000 Spring Training. At present, we have found no evidence that this style was carried over into the regular season, nor do we believe it saw use again in 2001.

“NEW YORK” in gray and white layered twill. Sleeve end knit trim is elastic white/gray/navy. Examples at lower left are both retail sale jerseys, the one at the right has later-style Majestic tagging on the tail.

© GameWornGuides.com

2001-2002 Batting Practice

Two year style, navy blue mesh button front with no sleeve-end stripes. “NY” logo on front is very bold. Velcro closure between the second and third buttons observed on game-spec versions. The MLB “Silhouetted Batter” logo is on the back of the neck. Notably, 2002 marks the final season in which Yankees batting practice jerseys are issued with blank sleeves, free of any visible manufacturer branding.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2006 Batting Practice

- Introduced in 2003, made of a new, softer, non-mesh first-generation “tech” fabric.
- Button-front design.
- Plain navy blue jersey with no sleeve-end trim.
- “NY” logo on front is bolder than on standard game jersey.
- One-color (white) Varsity numbers on back.
- No player names used.
- Beginning in 2003, the Yankees begin displaying the Majestic sleeve logo on batting practice jerseys only.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007-2010 Home Batting Practice/ 2007-2008 Road Batting Practice

Home version, with white side panel, used 2007–2010.

The Yankees display the Majestic sleeve logo on batting practice jerseys only.

Road version, with pale gray side panel, used 2007–2008 only.

The Yankees' two versions of the 2007 all-MLB batting practice jersey redesign remained as conservative as ever. Both styles are pullover tops with a single-button neck. There are two distinct versions:

- The home jersey features white side panels to coordinate with the home pants.
- The road jersey features pale gray side panels to better match the road gray pants.

The Yankees went to the extra effort of having two nearly identical jerseys made solely to align the side panel color with the appropriate pants. Other features include:

- Single-color white Varsity-style numbers on the back
- Heat-applied appliqués (not sewn)
- No player names (of course), consistent with Yankees tradition

The road version was replaced after 2008, as detailed on the following page.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009-2010 Road Batting Practice

- For 2009, the Yankees change the road batting practice jersey while leaving the home batting practice jersey alone.
- The front wordmark changes to mimic the road game jersey, with “NEW YORK” arched across the front, but in silver gray outlined with white.
- Side panels are gray on bottom and navy at the top under the arms.
- Wilson Varsity numbers in the same two-color appliqué as the front wordmark are heat pressed onto the back.
- Pullover design with a one-button collar.
- Majestic logo appears on sleeve, consistent with Yankees practice of allowing branding only on BP jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Home Batting Practice

The home BP jersey for 2011 reflects MLB's league-wide transition to a button-front design. It features a navy body with solid white spandex side panels and a white team logo sewn on the left chest. Player numbers are rendered in single-color white, Wilson Varsity font, and unlike previous heat-applied versions, these are sewn directly onto the fabric. As always, the Yankees display the Majestic logo only on their BP jerseys, not on game uniforms.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Road Batting Practice

- The Yankees continue to use different batting practice jerseys for home and road uniforms.
- The 2011–2013 road batting practice jerseys adopts a button-front design but is otherwise identical to the 2010 version.
- Features a navy blue body with solid gray side panels.
- Front “NEW YORK” wordmark and back numbers are two-color, silver-gray outlined in white.
- Both the wordmark and numbers return to sewn twill material.
- The Majestic logo appears on the sleeve, as it does only on Yankees’ BP jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Home Batting Practice

Minor changes are made to the Yankees' home batting practice jersey for 2014. Narrow knit trim is added to the neck and sleeve openings. The neck trim includes a thin white stripe, but the sleeve trim—unlike that of all other MLB teams—remains plain. White side panels now extend to cover the bottoms of the sleeves but reach only halfway down the sides, compared to the full-length white side panels used in 2013. All lettering is sewn twill. As always, the Yankees display the Majestic sleeve logo only on batting practice jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014-2016 Road Batting Practice

The Yankees display the Majestic sleeve logo on BP jerseys only.

Minor changes are made to the Yankees' road batting practice jersey for 2014. Narrow knit trim is added to the neck and sleeve openings. The neck trim features a thin gray stripe, while the sleeve trim—unlike that of all other MLB teams—remains plain. Gray side panels now extend to cover the bottoms of the sleeves but reach only halfway down the sides, compared to the full-length gray panels used in 2013. All lettering is two-color gray/white twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training Home

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Yankees use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season batting practice jerseys, as a basis for their Spring Training home jersey. The back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "FL" representing where the Yankees spend Spring Training. The left sleeve has the Yogi Berra "8" memorial patch. Like their game jerseys, the Yankees' Spring Training jerseys do not have the Majestic logo on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Spring Training Road

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Yankees use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season batting practice jerseys, as a basis for their Spring Training road jersey. The back numbers are gray patterned twill/white. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "FL" representing where the Yankees spend Spring Training. The left sleeve has the Yogi Berra "8" memorial patch. Like their game jerseys, the Yankees' Spring Training jerseys do not have the Majestic logo on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Alternate Home Batting Practice

At some point during the 2016 season, we believe the Yankees phased out their official Majestic batting practice jerseys—which featured navy fabric with white underarm panels and sleeve logos—in favor of these plain navy blue "alternate game jerseys" that lack the Majestic sleeve logo. This example from my collection includes team-issued tagging, indicating its use as part of the official uniform set.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Alternate Road Batting Practice

Here's an interesting item: During the 2016 season, the Yankees quietly began wearing their navy Spring Training road jersey style as a batting practice jersey on the road. This version omits the white side panels, making it more conservative than the official road BP jersey. It features gray-on-white front lettering and back numbers in plain twill (without the Spring Training pattern), and it lacks both the Spring Training sleeve patch and the memorial #8 for Yogi Berra. At bottom left is an excerpt from the Majestic catalog identifying this style as the "Alternate Road Navy." Notably, the on-field version lacks a Majestic sleeve logo—consistent with the Yankees' long-standing policy of keeping manufacturer logos off game uniforms, even when worn as warmups. One can only imagine Majestic wasn't thrilled about this. We've found no press photos of the team wearing the "Alternate Home Navy" as a home BP jersey, however.

Even though the jersey uses the Flex Base template with lightweight-style twill for the front lettering, the team-issued versions retained old fashioned layered twill for the back numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice Home

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Yankees home batting practice jersey is blue with blue back with white underarm gussets. The interlocking "NY" logo appears on the front left chest in white. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in white Varsity on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice Road

Yankees cap logo
1949–2025

The Yankees' road version of the new-for-2017 Spring Training jersey closely resembles the home version shown on the prior page, with a few key differences. Most notably, the underarm panels are gray rather than white, and the front logo is rendered in gray outlined with white. However, the most significant distinction is the use of the team's cap logo on the jersey—a narrower, taller, and differently proportioned version of the familiar interlocking "NY." For years, the Yankees have used separate designs for their cap and jersey logos. The Yankees were not alone in making this cap-logo switch—the Tigers also adopted their cap logo on Spring Training jerseys in 2017. But while Detroit acknowledged and incorporated the change into official team artwork, the Yankees made no formal mention of the deviation from tradition.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training Home

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before. The Yankees only used single-color white patterned twill on their 2016 Spring Training jersey, so the change makes no difference in 2017. The Yankees again use a design separate from their regular season standard set for their home BP jersey, reminiscent of their regular season BP jerseys from the 2002–2006 period. The back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “FL” representing where the Yankees spend Spring Training. Like their game jerseys, the Yankees’ Spring Training jerseys do not have the Majestic logo on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training Road

The Yankees continue their custom sine 2007 of having different Spring Training jerseys for home and road games. The road version has “NEW YORK” on front in gray twill outlined with white using the new kiss-cut, lightweight twill method. All Spring jerseys for 2017 have single-color back numbers, in white with a gray “Spring Training 2017” pattern. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “FL” representing where the Yankees spend Spring Training. Like their game jerseys, the Yankees’ Spring Training jerseys do not have the Majestic logo on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training Home

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design theme of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Yankees use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, also used as their regular-season batting practice jerseys, as their base. The back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training Road

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Yankees use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, also used as their regular season batting practice jerseys, as their base. The back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training Home

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The Yankees use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season batting practice jerseys, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "FLA," referencing their Spring Training home. The front logo and back numbers are white twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training Road

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The Yankees use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular season batting practice jerseys, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "FLA," referencing their Spring Training home. The front lettering and back numbers are gray/white twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training Home

2020

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned twill as the teams wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular season alternates. For 2020–2023, the Yankees use a design separate from their regular season standard set, a blue jersey white the white interlocking NY logo on front left chest, with white back numbers. The 2020 home version has the 25th Anniversary of Steinbrenner Field patch on the left sleeve.

2020

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training Road

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular season alternates. For 2020–2023, the Yankees use a design separate from their regular season standard set, a navy jersey with NEW YORK in gray/white on front, with gray/white back numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

Special Events Jerseys

1996 Negro Leagues Tribute (1934 New York Black Yankees)

From the Toledo Blade, June 9, 1996:
"As part of a Negro League salute yesterday, the Tigers wore replica uniforms of the Detroit Stars while New York was garbed in the colors of the New York Black Yankees. It was the first time the Yankees ever wore anything different from their traditional uniform."

June 8, 1996: In their first-ever participation in a throwback game, the Yankees faced the Tigers—who were dressed as the Detroit Stars—in a tribute to the Negro Leagues. The Yankees wore a replica of a 1934 New York Black Yankees jersey. The Black Yankees were based in New York City, operating as an independent club from 1932 to 1935, before joining the Negro National League from 1936 to 1948.

Game photos above by Dennis Philpot, courtesy of Matt Philpot

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1912

Shown as used in the game; neither team wore player numbers on back.

- In the Yankees' second-ever Turn Back the Clock game—and their first wearing period versions of their own uniforms rather than Negro League attire—they joined the Boston Red Sox in celebrating the 100th anniversary of Fenway Park's opening in 1912.
- The game, held on April 20, 2012, featured both teams in 1912-style reproductions of their respective uniforms. In a notable first, players took the field without numbers on their backs. Until then, all throwback games commemorating pre-number eras had still included back numbers.
- These Majestic reproductions were made of gray double knit and, in keeping with the period look, lacked manufacturer logos on the sleeves.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013-2014 Memorial Day

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

MLB mandated that all teams wear camouflage-lettered jerseys for Memorial Day in both 2013 and 2014. The Yankees, who were the visiting team each year, appeared at the Mets on May 27, 2013, and at the Cardinals on May 26, 2014. Any instance of the Yankees altering their uniforms is notable, as it happens so rarely. The desert camouflage lettering, outlined in white on gray fabric, was nearly invisible in game action—something clearly evident in photos. After seeing the effect in 2013, I was surprised the look returned for 2014.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013-2014 Military Appreciation Day

July 13, 2013: The Yankees hosted the Twins and staged their own "Military Appreciation Day," during which they altered the team logo and player numbers to a nearly invisible desert camouflage—supposedly in support of the armed services. I'll admit, I don't like the idea of camouflage-lettered uniforms. Were this any other team, I'd simply note the event and move on.

But the Yankees are a special case. They've avoided tampering with their iconic uniform for decades—eschewing player names on the back, declining to participate in Turn Back the Clock games, not wearing green St. Patrick's Day jerseys, and steering clear of the Turn Ahead the Clock travesty. They participated in MLB's mandated camouflage-lettering for Memorial Day in 2013 and 2014, but only because they were the visiting team those years.

This particular event, however, feels different—an elective deviation from tradition, and in my view, a chance to merchandise a new product. To me, this marked the first time the Yankees had, of their own accord, violated what many consider to be the sanctity of their uniform.

Editor's note: An overreaction on my part? In hindsight, probably yes. Since originally writing this jersey's narrative several editions ago, the Yankees have continued to push back against other promotional grabs like City Connect uniforms—and have never worn green jerseys on St. Patrick's Day.

(Note: This jersey was also worn on July 20, 2014, in a repeat of the same promotion.)

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Memorial Day

For Memorial Day, May 25, 2015, the Yankees one again add camo to their home jerseys, this time as part of the league-wide mandate. For this entry, they learn from the invisible-wordmark mistake of their previous year's Military Appreciation Day jersey, and wisely outline the desert camo front logo and back numbers in navy blue. Typically, these adornments appear in single-color navy only, so the team here adds an extra layer of twill, and the outcome is far more legible than the camo home jerseys from 2014. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white rather than its typical colors from 2014.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 Independence Day

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Yankees wear their home white jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in red, including their front logo as well as back numbers. The Yankees are one of four teams (with the Dodgers, Royals, and Tigers) whose lettering goes from one layer to two for this special promotion. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2017 Mother's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016

2016

May 14, 2017 (night)

All teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms for Mother's Day, May 8, 2016 and May 13–14, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Yankees wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering and back numbers in pink. In 2016, they continued to wear the black "8" on the left sleeve in honor of Yogi Berra as they did throughout the season. In 2017, their May 13 game was postponed by rain for a day-night doubleheader on the 14th. The evening's game honored Derek Jeter's number retirement and enshrinement in Monument Park, so the Yankees wore a special patch to mark the occasion on the right sleeve of the pink-trimmed jersey.

May 14, 2017 (day)

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Memorial Day

The Yankees apply the camouflage trimmings to their road gray jerseys for the game on May 30, 2016. Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The front lettering and back numbers are rendered in woodland camo with a black outline, and trim elements are also simplified to single-color black from the standard blue/white/blue. They continued to wear the “8” on the left sleeve in honor of Yogi Berra as they did throughout the 2016 season. These jerseys have the Majestic logo on the left sleeve, which their standard game jerseys, and their other 2016 special event jerseys, lack.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016-2017 Father's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

All teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms for Father's Day, June 19, 2016 and June 17–18, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The Yankees wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering and back number in light blue with dark gray outlines. All jersey trim, normally blue/white, becomes dark gray. In 2016, they wear the "8" on the left sleeve in honor of Yogi Berra as they did throughout the 2016 season. Both sleeves are blank in 2017.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Yankees are on the road and wear their road jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Yankees select the red twill version with blue outlines for their front lettering and for their back numbers. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. All jersey trim, normally blue/white, becomes single-color blue. They continued to wear the "8" on the left sleeve in honor of Yogi Berra as they did throughout the 2016 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Memorial Day (Home)

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green. The back-of-collar MLB logo switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve. The Yankees apply this style to their home white jerseys as worn on May 27–28, 2017 and May 26–28, 2018.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Memorial Day (Road)

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Yankees apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 29, 2017.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the new twill – appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1–2, 2017, the Yankees wear their road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and back numbers. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the new twill–appropriately red or blue. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 3–4, 2017 and July 2–4, 2018, the Yankees wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill front logo lettering and back numbers. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2018 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017 and August 24–26, 2018, the Yankees wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and gray sleeves with white nicknames and numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide gray/white/gray trim. The front features their "Yankees" script from their jackets and secondary "Top Hat" logo, here rendered in white/navy kiss-cut lightweight twill. The August 25, 2017 game is notable because, for the first time in their long and storied history, the Yankees wore jerseys with NOBs. Leadoff man Brett Gardner—one of three Yankees to display his actual last name instead of a nickname—becomes the first Yankee in franchise history to bat with a NOB after 114+ years!

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019.

Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Yankees wear a black version of their road jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Field of Dreams Game

MLB at Field of Dreams is a recurring Major League Baseball regular-season game played near the Field of Dreams movie site in Dyersville, Iowa, made famous by the 1989 film. The inaugural game takes place on August 12, with the Chicago White Sox facing off against the New York Yankees.

For this special event, the Yankees wear a version of their 1919 road uniforms, featuring a plain block "NEW YORK" across the chest in navy blue and player numbers only on the back, rendered in a modified McAuliffe-style font. Anachronistic details include the Nike logo on the right chest and the MLB logo on the back collar—modern additions that intrude on the vintage aesthetic.

The original 1919 road uniform, for comparison.

© GameWornGuides.com

Prototypes and Oddballs

1978-1985 Sample Road?

The jersey presented here was identified as a sample, though apart from the Wilson tag being positioned differently than on team-issued versions, there is no definitive evidence to confirm that status. The Wilson tag itself dates to the 1978–1985 period, during which Wilson produced all Yankees road jerseys. Notably, 1978 marked a change in the width of the white outline surrounding the front lettering. This particular example features the wider outline style introduced that year, suggesting it may have been a sample created to reflect or test that updated design.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990s Prototypes — Adidas/AIS

The owner of these jerseys says that they are prototype game-style jerseys made for the Yankees to be considered for team use.

The one on top is made by Adidas, interesting because the Yankees have a long-standing exclusive athletic licensing deal with Adidas, which has contractually kept any other manufacturer's logo off of any Yankee field-worn apparel for many years. The Yankees always have "plain" sleeves on their game jerseys. Adidas owns Reebok, and both have been a major supplier of jerseys for other sports, including the NBA, NFL and NHL, but has never made a jersey worn by MLB.

The bottom jersey is a prototype made by AIS, a Mets uniform supplier for several years.

AIS has supplied movie prop jerseys over the years, and this AIS jersey may be an example of that.

© GameWornGuides.com

1992 Long-Sleeved Spring Training/Batting Practice

I had never encountered long-sleeved knit batting practice jerseys until I came across these. At one point, a number of them were offered for sale. A Steiner letter of authenticity I located after a previous edition dates these jerseys to 1992, and the Russell tag style on the tail supports that dating. The sleeves are constructed in two pieces—almost as if the jerseys were originally short-sleeved and had longer sleeves added later. A close-up photo of the tag confirms that the fabric is of solid knit construction, not mesh.

Above: Close-up shows slash pockets on front. Size is "XL" instead of being more typically numerically sized. Don Mattingly wearing one similar to this at right.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990s Prototype Road?

This oddball may be a Russell prototype jersey submitted to the Yankees for consideration. It features one of the team's alternate wordmarks from their official print artwork—such as what appears on team letterhead—"New York" rendered in an elegant script. The jersey itself appears to be a retail-spec shell, as it bears the Russell "R" on the sleeve—something that would never appear on a Yankees on-field jersey. It includes the 1994–1998 style Diamond Collection tag on the tail. The black "X" marked on the tag typically signifies that the jersey was designated for disposal and is not to be represented as a first-quality item.

© GameWornGuides.com

1990s Samples — Competing Manufacturers

The tagging on these Rawlings jerseys strongly suggests they were samples submitted to the Yankees for consideration. The home jersey features 1992–1994 Rawlings tail tagging, displays Don Mattingly's number, and includes an intriguing paper tag in the neck that outlines its design characteristics. It may have been proposed as a minor league option, or perhaps it was simply a style sample used in a salesman's kit. The gray road jersey lacks a sleeve logo and is year-tagged 1998, with its tail tag sewn inside—consistent with typical team-issue construction. However, the Yankees did not wear Rawlings jerseys in 1998.

CS5

- Self-Material Hemmed Round Neck
- Quarter Length Butterfly Raglan Sleeves
- Extended Rear Tail
- "Rawlings®" Script Logo on Left Sleeve

SIZES:
36-48 (Even Only)

AVAILABLE FABRICS:
57CS5 (45% Nylon/55% Cotton — Heavyweight)
95CS5 (100% Polyester Warp Knit — White Body with Colored Pinstripes)
110 CS5 (100% Nylon Double Knit — Heavyweight)
132 CS5 (100% Stretch Polyester Double Kit — Pro Weight)
135 CS5 (100% Stretch Polyester Double Knit — with Colored Pinstripes)
350 CS5 (100% Polyester Warp Knit)
355 CS5 (100% Polyester Warp Knit — with Colored Pinstripes)

© GameWornGuides.com

1992-1993 Coaches' Spring Training

According to the Steiner Sports letter that accompanies this jersey, it is an early 1990s Spring Training mesh style worn by coaches on the field. During this period, players wore navy jerseys with white lettering.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999(?) Home Oddball

Here we have an unusual Yankees “home” jersey with “New York” on front rather than the team’s classing “NY” ligature. It is manufactured by AIS—a company that never made Yankees uniforms but did produce jerseys for the crosstown Mets for several years. The tagging indicates that this jersey could date back as early as 1999, though there’s no other way to ascertain a date. It is unlikely that AIS made this as a prototype for the team given the “New York” lettering, which would not have passed muster with the tradition-conscious Yankees. AIS did, however, occasionally produce uniforms for television, movies, or commercials, particularly when productions were not licensed to use official team logos. It’s plausible this jersey was created for that type of use. Curiously, it bears the number 32—retired by the Yankees in honor of their first Black player, Elston Howard, in 1984. Since Howard passed away in 1980, this jersey would not have been created for his use in any photo or video shoot.

© GameWornGuides.com

More Oddballs

Top left: This navy (or possibly black) Yankees batting practice jersey features Authentic Collection tags but displays a curiously color-reversed front logo—something I had never seen before until this example surfaced on eBay. While it could potentially be a "fashion" jersey, such items are generally not issued with Authentic Collection tagging, which makes this piece all the more unusual.

Multiple news photos exist of Mike Easler in 1986 wearing this odd home uniform with non standard spec back numbers. Easler was acquired late in Spring Training from the Red Sox (March 28) for Don Baylor. By June, the next available photos, he has the correct font.

Top, center: In the 2010 playoffs, pitcher David Robertson entered the game with this uniform gaffe that most would miss, even when it is clearly pointed out. His uniform was numbered using the wrong lettering font: it is Block font (as used by many teams, including the Cardinals, Rockies, Mariners and White Sox). The Yankees use Varsity font on their home jerseys, and have done so exclusively for decades. A correctly lettered, game worn Yankees #30 jersey from 2001 is shown, inset. (Thanks to Paul Lukas's Uni-Watch blog for this eagle-eyed catch.)

© GameWornGuides.com

“Authentic Collection”...but Not Game Worn

2002 style design

2011–2013 style design

Despite being sold with the “Authentic” label sewn into the tail, the Yankees do not wear green jerseys on St. Patrick’s Day. In fact, most MLB teams do not participate in this tradition—each year, only a few clubs actually wear green jerseys on the field. While these jerseys carry the “Authentic” designation—a term once reserved for true on-field gear—they are made by Majestic specifically for fans. In recent years, Majestic has produced these green jerseys for nearly every team, regardless of whether they are worn in actual games.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010 “Three Memorial” Jersey

- I believe the 2010 Yankees jersey marks the first “three-memorial” jersey in American sports history. Remarkably, heading into the All-Star break at mid-season, it featured no memorials at all!
- First, Bob Sheppard, the Yankees’ legendary stadium announcer, passed away at age 99 on July 11. Just two days later, on July 13, team owner George Steinbrenner died. That same evening, during the All-Star Game, Yankees players wore a simple black armband honoring both men.
- Immediately after the break, on July 16, the armband was removed. In its place, a Sheppard memorial patch was added to the left sleeve, and a “GMS/The Boss” Steinbrenner patch was placed on the front of the jersey.
- Then, just a week later on July 21, former Yankees manager Ralph Houk died. The club responded by adding a black armband on July 22—creating what is believed to be the first jersey in MLB history to feature three separate memorial tributes at once.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 Prototypes: Turn Back the Clock to 1912

YANKEES-STEINER COLLECTIBLES
THE OFFICIAL COLLECTIBLES COMPANY OF THE NEW YORK YANKEES

Yankees-Steiner Collectibles
Letter of Authenticity

Congratulations on the acquisition of your Steiner Sports Team Partnership Collectible!

Item: - New York Yankees 2017 Game-Issued - Interlocking NY Road Jersey (JC 052120)

The authenticity of this item is unconditionally guaranteed, and the undersigned certifies that it was obtained as part of the Yankees-Steiner Sports Team Partnership Program.

On behalf of the Steiner Sports Team partnership, we hope that you enjoy the addition of this amazing item to your collection.

Sincere regards,

Brandon Steiner
Chairman and CEO
Steiner Sports Memorabilia

Shown here are two prototypes for the Yankees' 2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1912 game. The top jersey is a pullover with a four-button neck closure and a number on the back ("12" signifying the year it was to be worn, as typical). The D1-1 on the strip tag indicates this was version one of the jersey tested. These jerseys were worn as shown in the bottom prototype, with a full button front and no player numbers on back. This version's tag identifies it at D1-3, meaning the third version. We have yet to see version two in the hobby, and we wonder what the difference would have been, perhaps full button with player number on back, or four-button with no number? Perhaps one day we will learn.

The Steiner letter that accompanied the top jersey simply list it as "game issued" without calling attention to its variation from what was worn on the field. Likely the samples were cast aside in the locker room and was gathered up and sold as part of a cleanup.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Derek Jeter Retirement (Retail Only)

Not worn on the field, but featuring “Authentic Collection” Majestic tagging, this specially lettered gold-over-navy Derek Jeter retirement tribute jersey became a hot collector’s item in 2014. It includes the team patch worn on the right sleeve during Jeter’s final home games, commemorating his 20-year Major League career—spent entirely with the Yankees.

© GameWornGuides.com

Annual ‘Dress Like Mariano Rivera’ Day?

The Yankees on April 15 each year.

Mariano Rivera himself—every day, every year—the final player in Major League Baseball permitted to wear #42 on the field.

- Of course, all the Yankees at left are wearing #42 in honor of Jackie Robinson, as does every player in the MLB each April 15. But through 2013, the Yankees held a unique distinction: they had a player on their roster who wore Robinson’s #42 not just for one day a year, but every day.
- When MLB universally retired the number in 1997, the league “grandfathered” it—allowing any player then wearing #42 to continue doing so for the remainder of their career.
- Mariano Rivera, already active at the time, continued to wear the number with dignity and distinction until his retirement in 2013. He was the final player in all of MLB still entitled to wear #42 full time. Upon his retirement, the Yankees retired the number again—this time, for Rivera himself.

© GameWornGuides.com

1974 “Almost-Was” Road Reverse-Pinstripe; and Early 2000s Retail Revival?

Yankees mulled jersey change in 1974

Originally Published: September 30, 2010

By Paul Lukas

With most MLB teams having solid-colored alternate jerseys nowadays, the old protocol of wearing white at home and gray on the road has been reduced to a quaint relic. It's not unusual to see a color-against color game, and just last week the A's and White Sox went black against black.

But with the pomp and circumstance of the postseason looming, old-schoolers can take heart in the knowledge that the Yankees will always wear their pinstripes at home and their grays on the road. Thus has it ever been, thus will it ever be.

Except it almost wasn't. Although most fans aren't aware of it, the Bronx Bombers nearly gave their road uni a major overhaul in the 1970s. Former Yankees PR director Marty Appel spilled the beans on that one in his 2001 book, Now Pitching for the Yankees, which included the following passage:

> "In 1974 I walked into [then-general manager] Gabe Paul's office to find samples of new Yankee road uniforms draped across his sofa. They were the opposite of the home pinstripes—they were navy blue with white pinstripes. The NY logo was in white. Gabe liked them. I nearly fainted. ... I think my dramatic disdain helped save the day and saved the Yankees from wearing those awful pajamas on the field."

Looking exactly like the 1974 jersey described in the book excerpt at left, this example is decidedly newer. The tagging places it as a Majestic product from 2000 or later. The internal tag code near the bottom—“6260”—is unfamiliar, but Majestic garments coded in the 6000 series are typically retail items not made to team-issued specifications. Team-spec garments, by contrast, usually carry codes beginning with “006x.”

There was a time when jerseys bearing the “Authentic Collection” tag were made for on-field use first, with retail versions produced for fan sale thereafter. But in later years, that practice grew murkier. Majestic, for instance, produced green St. Patrick’s Day jerseys with “Authentic” tags—even though only a handful of teams ever actually wore them in games.

It’s understandable from a retail standpoint: keeping Yankees merchandise fresh is a challenge. The team hasn’t meaningfully changed its home or road uniforms in decades and refuses to chase every promotional opportunity with new designs. As a result, most fans who want an authentic Yankees jersey probably already have one. My contacts at Majestic do not recall this jersey being part of their catalog, but in my view, the inside tagging supports that it is a legitimate Majestic product—just not one made for the Yankees to wear on the field.

Far right: None of these navy pinstripe jerseys should be confused with the uniforms worn by the concession vendors at Yankee Stadium, who wear a similar jersey but with white buttons and the team’s batting helmet version of the interlocking NY logo on the chest, and “Yankee Stadium” in white on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020 Sample Nike Home

Though Nike's 2020 entry into MLB jerseys resulted only in the re-branding and relabeling of Majestic's previous Flex Base jersey template, it appears that Nike still produced sample jerseys for team inspection. Here is one such example, made up for the YANKEES.

This jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, it is size 46, a common sample size, and the player number "20" represents the year for which the sample was made.

Outwardly, this classic home white jersey appears just as it did on the field in 2020, a testament to the fact the team was not planning any changes for that season. However, there are still some small details in this sample that were updated before the full run of 2020 jerseys went into production. First, a heat-pressed neck tag which was not used in on-field jerseys. Next, an interior hear-pressed tag, almost twice as tall as the ones used by Majestic before and Nike after, appears inside the placket, however, it was removed from this example. It's absence means we cannot get more information about if this was a first or later sample made for the team. However, this tag's location is still telling, as it was used by Majestic for team tagging, but Nike versions moved these tags below the jock tags on the lower front of the jerseys.

Finally, the "0730" code on the back of the laundry tag is the same used for Majestic's version of the Flex Base template. By the time these jerseys were released in 2020, the product code had been updated to "0890" to reflect the new Nike jerseys, even though nothing had really changed.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Prototype Nike Oddball

This may be the most unusual oddball we have ever discovered. In fact, it is hard to even begin to discuss what this item may be. At first, it seems like a poorly executed fan jersey, or even a bad counterfeit. But on closer inspection, and with some research, it is harder to dismiss.

This borderline futuristic Yankees jersey appears to be a sample made in collaboration between Nike and a company called Bemis Associates, which describes itself as “a leader in adhesives and bonding solutions, partnering with apparel, industrial and consumer electronics brands.” Bemis’ logo is next to Nike’s in the collar of this jersey. In terms of its apparel business, Bemis makes flexible, thermoplastic materials that allow for the manufacturing and embellishing of garments without sewing. Of note, almost every element on this jersey, from front and back lettering to sleeve decorations to Nike’s jock tag, are all applied without stitching. The lone exception is the ChromaFlex MLB logo on the back of the neck, which is sewn on. Even the jersey itself was assembled a very minimum of stitching. The neck/placket, bottom hem, and even the shoulder seams are fused together with a reinforced, plastic tape of sorts, which closely resembles some of the products Bemis makes and sells for use in active wear. As hard as we have tried, we cannot identify the “NAC” or “N^C Innovation” logo, but we will get to that in a moment.

Aside from being free of most stitching, the jersey itself is a thick, heavy polyester that seems to contain some elastic or spandex, as it stretches in all directions. It is of a similar construction and cut to some college baseball jerseys Nike has made, such as the Vanderbilt jersey seen at right. Both the Vanderbilt jersey and this sample have a flat placket with plastic snaps on front and large perforations for ventilation on back, so there is precedent for Nike making this type of jersey.

(continued next page)

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Prototype Nike Oddball, continued

These detail images show how each decorative element on the jersey is applied without stitching. The two “sleeve patches” (the Yankees top hat logo and American League logo) are a rubbery, textured material that stretches with the jersey, but does not appear liable to cracking or breaking when stretched or folded. The player name, here “Yankees,” is in the same material. The front NY logo and back player number 21 are a different material, though both are also applied without sewing. They are puffy and perforated with textured borders. They too are flexible, but not as much as the other elements shown on this page.

We have seen other examples of Nike samples using a team name as a player name, so though not common, it is not unique. Given Nike’s practice, which was common with other manufactures in the past, we assume the “21” player number represents 2021, a time when this jersey was made, or was intended to be used. Assuming the sample was made a year or more in advance, it likely predates Nike’s arrival in MLB for 2020, perhaps by a year or more.

(continued next page)

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 Prototype Nike Oddball, continued

We realize you were not expecting NBA shorts in this publication, but bear with us. As further provenance for the oddball Yankees jersey as being an actual, possible prototype, we share this pair of NBA shorts that has the same Bemis, Nike, and NAC logos as the jersey. This pair of shorts may have been made as an All-Star Game sample, given the design, but with the "Nike" logo on the waistband, it is unlikely that a specific team was associated with it. The shorts include a paper tag that outlines the various decorative and manufacturing materials used throughout, including the "SF" or "Sew Free" construction. Nike has been the NBA's official uniform supplier since 2017, so it is likely that this pair of shorts was an official collaboration between Nike and Bemis to show the league what the two companies could do together.

Given that Nike was set to take over MLB uniform production for the 2020 season, and the likelihood that the Yankees sample shown in the previous pages was made in advance of that date, and it includes the CFX MLB logo and Nike's authentic collection tagging, it is possible that the sample may have been a similar Nike/Bemis collaboration for MLB like the NBA shorts shown here. The choice of the Yankees, one of MLB's most traditional and conservative teams, is curious, even controversial. But maybe Nike was going all-in on change and innovation, they may have chosen to rock that boat. And in reality, the sample may have been an exercise in what the companies could do given modern materials, construction, and embellishments, and less a suggestion for what they would want to do for (or to) the Yankees.

As for the "NAC Innovation" logo seen on both of these sample items, we have reached a dead end, despite many online searches, including trademark databases. Perhaps "NAC" is Nike Authentic Collection, and the "innovation" part speaks for itself with how futuristic the jersey is? More research is required on that element. But one thing is for certain...as upset as many MLB fans were when they saw Nike roll out its 2024 Vapor Premier Elite uniform template, we can only imagine what would have happened if the Yankees, and other teams, took to the field in a concept such as this.

© GameWornGuides.com

Commemorative Patches

Yankees Commemorative Patches

1973 —Original patch has white border, many reproduction patches lack this.

1979, after August 2: Armband for Thurman Munson

1980 all season: Armband for Thurman Munson.

1981 all season: Armband for Elston Howard.

- 1973: Yankee Stadium 50th anniversary.
- 1976: Billy Martin alone wears armband for Casey Stengel.
- 1979, starting August 3 to end of season and all of 1980: Black armband on left sleeve for Thurman Munson.
- 1981: Black armband on left sleeve for Elston Howard.
- 1985: Black armband on left sleeve for long time clubhouse attendant Pete Sheehy, after August 14.
- 1986: Black armband for Roger Maris all season.

The Yankees have worn commemorative armbands in 14 seasons since 1979. These always appear on the left sleeve, and are generally sewn directly above the sleeve seam. In several years multiple memorials have been worn, with some being added mid-season with the passing of a former player or in the case of 2001, with the events of 9/11.

Here, I am sharing photos of all of these memorials, on both home and road jerseys, and the dates they appeared.

1985, after August 14: Armband for long time equipment manager Pete Sheehy.

1986: All season armband for Roger Maris.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

- 1990: Black "1" worn for Billy Martin all season. (no armband).
- 1995: Black Armband on left sleeve The number "7" above the armband for Mickey Mantle after 8/13/95.
- 1996: Black Armband on left sleeve for broadcaster Mel Allen after 6/18/96.
- 1998: Yankee Stadium 75th anniversary (in white) worn only on batting practice jersey. Gray bordered version exists, but not used. The were both intended for use on game jerseys but a dispute during the discussion of the desire for a new stadium and resulting hard feelings relegated them to batting practice jerseys only.

1990: All season black "1" for Billy Martin (no armband).

1995: After August 13: combination black "7" and armband for Mickey Mantle

1996: After June 18, armband for former broadcaster Mel Allen

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

1999: From start of season, black 5 alone for Joe DiMaggio (above) armband added after September 9 for Catfish Hunter (right).

2000: Bob Lemon armband

2001: Armband (and USA flag on back of neck) after 9/11/2001

- 1999: Black "5" on left sleeve for Joe DiMaggio all season, black armband added for Catfish Hunter after September 9.
- 2000: Black armband on left sleeve for Bob Lemon all season.
- 2001: Black armband (WTC victims) post-9/11. home jersey only.
- 2003: 100th Anniversary, worn on BP as well (recall the Yankees were not charter members of the American League, joining in 1903, and therefore were not entitled to wear the "Charter Member" AL patch in 2001).
- 2004, March 30–31: "Ricoh" Sponsor patch worn for opening series in Tokyo against Devil Rays.

2004 Opening Series in Tokyo, Japan, March 30–31

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

2005: September 9–10 only

2007: Armband worn all season for pitcher Corey Lidle; black "10" added after 8/14 for Phil Rizzuto.

- 2005, September 9–10: Salvation Army patch, post Hurricane Katrina,
- 2007: Black armband on left sleeve of both home and road uniforms for Cory Lidle, worn all season including Spring Training
- Then "10" worn above arm-band from August 14 onward for Phil Rizzuto
- 2008: Black armband for Bobby Murcer from July 13
- 2008: Yankee Stadium Final Season patch, left sleeve
- 2008: All-Star Game patch, right sleeve
- 2009: Yankee Stadium Inaugural Patch on both home and road jerseys (unusual for a stadium commemorative patch to be worn on a road jersey).

2008: From start of season, All-Star and Yankee Stadium patches, both are worn on home and road jerseys

2009

2008: Armband added for Bobby Murcer July 14 (after All-Star break)

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

2010

- Following the passing of long-time public address announcer Bob Sheppard and owner George Steinbrenner, the New York Yankees wore a black armband in memory of both men at the All-Star Game on July 13. Starting with their series at home against Tampa Bay on July 16, the team replaced the armband with two patches, one with the initials "GMS" on their left chest for Steinbrenner, and on the left sleeve, a patch honoring Sheppard.
- When former manager (1966–1973) Ralph Houk died July 21, the team added a black armband on their left sleeve on July 22, making this probably a first: a three memorial patch uniform.

2010

2010

2010: Armband added after July 22

Not worn by the Yankees: These four examples are fan merchandise patches. While they may be officially MLB-licensed, they were never worn by Yankees players. The Yankees do not wear commemorative patches or gold-trimmed jerseys to mark division titles, league championships, or World Series victories.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

April 1, 2013

September 22–26, 2013

September 2014 home games

- 2013, April 1: The 2013 season started with every team in MLB wearing a patch commemorating the tragedy of the Sandy Hook school shooting in Newtown, CT on December 14, 2012 in which 26 children and teachers died. Originally, the patch was to be worn only by the Red Sox and Yankees, the two teams closest to the locale; the commissioner of baseball asked the other 28 clubs to participate.
- 2013, September 22–26: Team wore left-sleeve patch commemorating the retirement of Mariano Rivera, arguably the greatest closing pitcher of all time, who spent his entire 19-year career with the Yankees, the last 17 as their closer, a phenomenal accomplishment. Home jerseys only.
- 2014, September 7–11 and 18–25: Team wore left-sleeve patch on home jerseys for team captain Derek Jeter who spent his entire 20-year Major League career with the Yankees.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

May 24, 2015

May 17, 2015

August 23, 2015

August 22, 2015

Starting September 23, 2015 and all of 2016

- 2015, May 17: Negro Leagues Baseball patch with #28 for Ernie Banks. For this game, the Yankees were in Kansas City, and the Royals wore uniforms of the Kansas City Monarchs, for which Banks had played 1950–1953.
- 2015, May 24: Bernie Williams patch worn in honor of his number retirement that day.
- 2015, August 22: Jorge Posada patch worn in honor of his number retirement that day.
- 2015, August 23: Andy Pettitte patch worn in honor of his number retirement that day.
- 2015, starting September 23 and all of 2016: “8” Memorial for Yogi Berra (without an armband)

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

May 14, 2017
(night)

June 29–30, 2019

- 2017, starting September 7: Memorial armband for former player, coach, and executive, Gene Michael.
- 2017, May 14 (night game of doubleheader): Derek Jeter number retirement patch, worn on right sleeve of Mothers Day pink-trimmed jersey
- 2019: Memorial armband for former player and pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre.
- 2019, June 29–30: Biofreeze sponsor patch (left sleeve) and MLB London Series patch (right sleeve) for games in London vs. Red Sox.
- 2020 Spring Training: Steinbrenner Field 25th patch, left sleeve Spring Training home jerseys only
- 2020: HGS memorial patch for former General Partner/ Co-Chairperson Henry G. "Hank" Steinbrenner
- 2020, September 11: "We Shall Not Forget" patches on left chest in honor of 9/11 anniversary
- 2020, October 9: "16" number on right sleeve (above HGS patch) for Whitey Ford, who died the day before.

October 9, 2020

2020 Spring Training

September 11, 2020

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Commemorative Patches, continued

- 2021: “16” patch for Whitey Ford
- 2021, September 11: American flag patch on back of collar in recognition of 20th anniversary of 9/11. Patch was adhesive, and many fell off.
- 2023, May 5–7: Green Mental Health Awareness Month ribbon for games against the Rays, who wore this same ribbon for all of May 2022 and May 2–7, 2023 in recognition of Mental Health Awareness Month, following the suicide of Rays bullpen catcher Jean Ramirez.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023-2024 Yankees Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Yankees struck a sponsor patch deal with Starr Insurance. The patches first appeared on July 21, 2023.

The patch is blue with the Starr Insurance logo in white.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 Yankees Advertising Patches

The Yankees update their ad patch for 2025. The patch is now a blue rectangle with simply the sponsor name “STARR” in white lettering.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yankees Postseason Patches

1996 World Series (right sleeve)

2000 World Series (right sleeve)

1998 World Series (right sleeve)

1999 World Series (right sleeve)

2001 World Series (left sleeve, above armband)

© GameWornGuides.com

2003 World Series (right sleeve)

2017 AL Wild Card

2017 AL Division Series

2017 AL Championship Series (right sleeve)

2009 World Series (right sleeve)

2018 AL Wild Card

2018 AL Division Series (right sleeve)

2015 AL Wild Card (right sleeve) single game "series"

2019 AL Division Series

2019 AL Championship Series (right sleeve, above MLB150 patch)

Back

Document of Restoration

New York Yankees 1971 Munson Home Jersey

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: New York Yankees home flannel jersey year tagged 1971 with "Munson" name sewn in collar, tackle twill #16 on back. Light table examination shows #15 had been on the jersey previously. Presumably this jersey was used in spring training, its number was changed; the font is not standard; but the front "NY" crest seems undisturbed.

Work Performed: Removed the back numbers, lifted the pattern from the shadows and found it to match the team template for numbers in 1971. New numbers were cut from backed wool felt; Because there was minor discoloration from dirt and use that made the replaced back number ghosts more obvious, the jersey was laundered and steamed prior to reapplying the replacement back numbers. The replacements were stitched with a small zig zag stitch in the same manner as the originals would have been.

William F. Henderson
Restoration Specialist and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications
Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
The Dream Shop: MLB Jersey Restorations
http://GameWornGuides.com http://TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Billy Martin 1977 New York Yankees (Manager) Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: December 8. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1217J09

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 7-button knit gray size 42 New York Yankees jersey issued to and worn by manager Billy Martin. "NEW YORK" is arched in tackle twill across the front in navy with a white outline in the 1977-appropriate font. Number "1" in two color navy and white tackle twill with no name on the back is correct as well. Sewn-in Navy/white/navy knit sleeve end trim. Size 42 is correct for Martin. As Yankee manager, Martin led the team to consecutive American League pennants in 1976 and 1977; the Yankees triumphed over the Los Angeles Dodgers in six games in the 1977 World Series.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag size 42, appropriate for use for the 1977 season, is sewn onto the front outside left tail of the jersey. Team collar tagging "Martin 77 1" (which indicates 1977 season, and set 1) is hand chain stitched in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher onto a rectangular strip of gray knit fabric, and then sewn properly inside the back of the collar with stitching invisible from the outside back. The tag is original and unaltered.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that the lettering on this jersey is original and without alteration. It is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times; letters and numbers show signs of puckering and loose threads from repeated washing and use. The jersey' linen placket lining shows dirt and wear commensurate with at least a season's worth of use. There is evidence of the removal of left sleeve armband. Though the jersey is dated 1977, the team did not wear armbands until July 1979 and all through the 1980 season, for the passing of Thurman Munson. Martin was famously fired and rehired multiple times by team owner Steinbrenner, and after being fired for 1978 he returned and managed the team in 1979. Since no other player (save for Bobby Murcer 1969-1974) was issued the eventually retired number 1 that had been Martin's from his 1950s playing days, and the fact that the Yankees often kept prior years' jerseys to reissue if needed, it is very reasonable to assume that this jersey was reissued to Martin in 1979, perhaps as a "set 2" backup. Martin was fired again at the end of the 1978 season, so he would not wear it with armband in 1980.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits good use. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Billy Martin in the 1977 and probably again in the 1979 seasons.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Document of Restoration

Yankees 1976 Dempsey Road Game Jersey, Front Restoration

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of a restoration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: Yankees road gray 1976 jersey of catcher Rick Dempsey, front with "New York" improperly restored; sewn too low and in the wrong arch. Strong evidence of prior minor league ONEONTA wordmark having been removed, very faint ghost evidence of original NEW YORK visible on light table.
Work Performed: Replacement NEW YORK stripped from front, glue cleaned and fabric streamed, Cut a new replacement wordmark from team pattern, age-matched the fabric using media blasting and organic dyes. Using light table, stitched the recreated wordmark over the original ghosts, stitched with age-matched thread. Photos of before, during and after are below. The back of the jersey was left untouched.

Top row, at left, before and center and right, after restoration. Back is all original. Middle row shows pre-fabric steaming and ghosts for all three word marks that had once been present. Bottom right, the aged and dyed new wordmark, laid over white twill to show the difference in shade.

William F. Henderson
Professional Authenticator and Restoration Specialist

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications
Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
The Dream Shop: MLB Jersey Restorations
http://GameWornGuides.com http://TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Elston Howard 1976 (Coach) New York Yankees Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J16

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1976 New York Yankees, seven-button home pinstripe knit jersey. The Yankees intertwined "NY" wordmark in Navy twill is sewn to the left chest. Number 32 in one color Navy tackle twill with no name on the back in the proper font/size correct for the Yankees in the 1976 season, and the correct 5 1/2" from the collar. Jersey has the correct 1 1/8" pinstripe spacing properly used in 1976, as opposed to the 1" spacing used in 1981 and after. Size 46 is reasonable for Howard. The inside of the placket is lined with linen for player comfort. After a 13-year career with the Yankees starting in 1955, Howard played his final two seasons with the Boston Red Sox. He retired and rejoined the Yankees as first-base coach in 1969, a role he filled through the 1979 season.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson was the exclusive maker of the Yankees' home jerseys in 1976. The small rectangular Wilson manufacturer/size tag noting the size as 46, is in the proper style as typically used through the end of the 1977 season. The tag is stitched on the outside left front tail. "Howard" is hand chain stitched in the Wilson factory tailor's familiar handwriting onto a white knit rectangular strip of fabric in a style consistent with other examples of 1976 Yankees home jerseys in our archives. The strip is then stitched into the inside back of the collar. Appropriately, the tagging has been stitched to the placket so that the zig zag stitches are not visible from the outside back of the collar. This method was employed at the factory, with the team tagging added prior to the collar flap being stitched closed. Below the Wilson size tag on the left tail is a rectangle of knit fabric with "76 1" hand chain-stitched in the familiar and correct style.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitched elements of this jersey are original and unaltered. While the jersey body remains in overall good condition, the sewn-on elements— the interlocked NY logo on front and the player number on back are badly bleached to a pale purple. My observation is that Yankee jerseys of the early and middle-1970s used a type of fabric for their lettering that was different from that used by other teams. Typically (Webster/Liebe-made) MLB-standard jersey tackle twill is practically impervious to bleaching. However, this period-original Yankees twill has a sheer white cloth backing, is damaged by chlorine

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

bleach and shrinks aggressively when washed in water that is too hot. The thread on the player name tag inside the back collar shows some signs of bleach-fading as well. The thread holding the back numbers and front crest in place is failing and coming out, visible on the inside of the jersey. it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed very many times; the numbers have shrunk by almost 1/2" from their original height and have seriously puckered the fabric beneath them. The fabric is not bright white any longer, having acquired an even ivory-gray tone. The placket lining shows only moderate signs of sweat staining and puckering from use. The original buttons remain in place. I would judge that this jersey was used multiple seasons and might have been reissued in the minor leagues as was the fate of most Yankees game jerseys of this period, though notably it retains its original front crest, however it is hard to imagine that this garment acquired this much wear while still being used in the Major Leagues by a coach. This jersey is notably very dirty overall likely as much from handling, display and storage than from use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, has no other alterations. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by coach Elston Howard of the New York Yankees during the 1976 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Yogi Berra 1978 (Coach) New York Yankees Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J15

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1978 New York Yankees, seven-button home pinstripe knit jersey. The Yankees intertwined "NY" wordmark in Navy twill is sewn to the left chest. Number 8 in one color Navy tackle twill with no name on the back in the proper font/size correct for the Yankees in the 1978 season, and the correct 5 1/2" from the collar. Jersey has the correct 1 1/8" pinstripe spacing properly used in 1978, as opposed to the 1" spacing used in 1981 and after. Size 44 is correct for Berra. The inside of the placket is lined with linen for player comfort. The jersey has a black armband on the left sleeve, though notably armbands were not worn in 1978. Armbands were worn for Thurman Munson after 8/2/1979 and all through the 1980 season. In these years, the Yankees typically kept a set of the players' prior year's jerseys as backups.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson was the exclusive maker of the Yankees' home jerseys in 1978. The small rectangular Wilson manufacturer/size tag noting the size as 44, is in the proper style as typically used through the end of the 1977 season; we would not deem it unusual to occasionally find these style size-tags on 1978 jerseys as the maker's supply of the older ones was exhausted. The tag is stitched on the outside left front tail. "Berra 78 2" is hand chain stitched in the Wilson factory tailor's familiar handwriting onto a white knit rectangular strip of fabric in a style consistent with other examples of 1978 Yankees home jerseys in our archives. The strip is then stitched into the inside back of the collar. Appropriately, the tagging has been stitched to the placket so that the zig zag stitches are not visible from the outside back of the collar. This method was employed at the factory, with the team tagging added prior to the collar flap being stitched closed. There is no team year tagging on the tails of Yankee jerseys in 1978.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitched elements of this jersey are original and unaltered. While it remains in overall good condition, it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times; the fabric is not bright white any longer, having acquired a slightly grayish tone. Front crest and back numbers have lost their original sheen and are a flat tone. there are several dirt scuffs and splattered brownish stains between the bottom two buttons. The placket lining shows signs of sweat staining and puckering from use. The original buttons remain in place. I would judge that this jersey was used all season, and was saved into 1979 as a backup, yet was spared reissue in the minor leagues as was the fate of most Yankees game jerseys of this period. This jersey is also rather dirty overall likely more from handling and storage than from use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, and aside from the incorrect armband application for 1978, has no other alterations. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Yogi Berra of the New York Yankees during the 1978 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Don Gullett 1978 New York Yankees Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date:December 8. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1217J08

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1978 New York Yankees, seven-button home pinstripe knit jersey. The Yankees intertwined "NY" wordmark in Navy twill is sewn to the left chest. Number "35" in one color Navy tackle twill with no name on the back in the proper font/size correct for the Yankees in the 1978 season, and the correct 5 1/2" from the collar. Jersey has the correct 1 1/8" pinstripe spacing properly used in 1978, as opposed to the 1" spacing used in 1981 and after. Size 44 is reasonable for Gullett at 6' 0" and 190 lbs. to have worn. The inside of the placket is lined with linen for player comfort. 1978 was Gullett's final season in baseball; he started 8 games and went 4-2. Playing for only nine seasons, Gullett was a member of six World Series teams (1970, '72, '75, '76, '77, and '78), including four consecutive world champions -'75 and '76 Reds, and '77 and '78 Yankees (Wikipedia)

The jersey has a black armband on the left sleeve. Armbands were worn for Thurman Munson after 8/2/1979 and all through the 1980 season. Gullett retired after the 1978 season, and no Yankee roster player was issued #35 for either 1979 or 1980. The presence of the armband could be explained as this jersey being worn by a coach or prepared for use in case it was needed by a call-up, or could have been used in Spring Training. Gullett would not have worn it with the armband in place. It was common for the Yankees to prepare and reissue jerseys as potential backups in subsequent years.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson was the exclusive maker of the Yankees' home jerseys in 1978. The small rectangular Wilson manufacturer/size tag noting the size as 44, is in the proper style as typically used through the end of the 1977 season; we would not deem it unusual to occasionally find these style size-tags on 1978 jerseys as the maker's supply of the older ones was exhausted. The tag is stitched on the outside left front tail. "Gullett 78 1" is hand chain stitched in the Wilson factory tailor's familiar handwriting onto a white knit rectangular strip of fabric in a style consistent with other examples of 1978 Yankees home jerseys in our archives. The strip is then stitched into the inside back of the collar. Appropriately, the tagging has been stitched to the placket so that the zig zag stitches are not visible from the outside back of the collar. This was done at the factory, with the team tagging added prior to the collar flap being stitched closed. There is no team year tagging on the tails of Yankee jerseys in 1978.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitched elements of this jersey are original and unaltered. While it remains in overall good condition, it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times; the fabric is not bright white any longer, having acquired a slightly grayish tone. Front crest and back numbers have lost their original sheen and are a flat tone. The placket lining shows signs of sweat staining and puckering from use. The original buttons remain in place. I would judge that this jersey was used all season, and was spared reissue in the minor leagues as was the fate of most Yankees game jerseys of this period.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use and wash wear, and aside from the incorrect armband application for 1978, has no other alterations. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Don Gullett of the New York Yankees during the 1978 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Yogi Berra 1981 (Coach) New York Yankees Game Used Road Jersey and Pants

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201JP01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray seven-button knit gray New York Yankees jersey issued to and worn by coach Yogi Berra during the 1981 season. "NEW YORK" is arched in tackle twill across the front in navy with a white outline in the 1981-appropriate font and placket spacing. Number 8 in two-color navy and white tackle twill with no name on the back as is correct for the Yankees. Navy/white/Navy 1-1/4" sewn-in knit trim at the end of each sleeve. The placket of the jersey is lined with linen for player comfort. Berra has signed the jersey "Y. Berra #8" just below the team wordmark on the left side. I have no opinion on the authenticity of the autograph, but a Beckett letter of authenticity for it is included The Elston Howard black armband is properly sewn to the end of the left sleeve, properly for 1981 leaving about an inch of gray jersey fabric showing between it and the sleeve-end trim. It appears to be original and unrestored.

Matching gray Wilson size 38 pants are included, with a proper manufacturer tag, team strip tag in the correct style sewn inside the front inside of the waistband, hand chain stitched BERRA 81 1 23 (where the 23 is the inseam measurement). The pants show wash wear, and have two back slash pockets each secured by a single gray button, as well as a front custom 2" small pocket watch-style slash pocket just below the first belt loop on the right side. That pocket lacks any type of closure, and shows obvious dirt/wear around its edge indicating it was accessed frequently. The zipper is operational and an additional single-button closure is added above the zipper.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag showing the size 44 sewn to the left outside front tail, appropriate size for Berra and correct style for use for the 1981 season. Team tagging "BERRA 81 1" (which indicates player's name, 1981 season, and set 1) is hand chain stitched in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher onto a rectangular strip of gray knit fabric, and then sewn inside the back of the collar. It is properly stitched before the placket/collar lining was sewn closed, so that no stitching from the tagging is visible on the outside back of the jersey. Pants tagging is detailed above.

Wear & Repairs: It is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times; all lettering shows signs of puckering, fabric edge-softening and and a few loose threads from repeated washing and player use. The linen placket lining is stained from sweat around the neck and yellowed throughout. Jersey is original with no alterations, and appears to have been pulled from circulation and avoided a second life in the minor leagues as was so common with most Yankee jerseys of the period. The second button from the bottom is a non original replacement. There is a random blue pen mark just above the Wilson tag that undoubtedly happened when Berra autographed the jersey.

Conclusion: The jersey and pants in review are properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. They are consistent with known exemplars, exhibit appropriate use and wash wear, and appear to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey and pants combination is genuine and was worn by Yogi Berra of the New York Yankees during the 1981 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Don Mattingly "Rookie" 1983 New York Yankees Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: December 17. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1217J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray seven-button knit gray New York Yankees jersey issued to and worn by Don Mattingly during the 1983 season. "NEW YORK" is arched in tackle twill across the front in navy with a white outline in the 1983-appropriate font and placket spacing. Number "46" as he wore during his first two seasons in the majors, in two-color navy and white tackle twill with no name on the back as is correct for the Yankees. Navy/white/Navy 1-1/4" sewn-in knit trim at the end of each sleeve. The placket of the jersey is lined with linen for player comfort . Jersey is signed twice on the front by Mattingly, once on the left above the wordmark in what appears to be ballpoint pen, and again below the wordmark in blue Sharpie. I have no opinion of the authenticity of the autographs. The Wilson tag bears two serialized stickers, one BB78030 by JSA for the autograph, and the other of Schulte Sports #3397, though no certificates accompanied the jersey when I reviewed it.

After a brief seven-game call-up in 1982, Mattingly registered a full rookie season in 1983, with 279 at bats in 91 games, playing as a part-time outfielder and first baseman. Mattingly was named to the American League (AL) All-Star team six times. He won nine Gold Glove Awards (an AL record for a first baseman), three Silver Slugger Awards, the 1984 AL batting title, and was the 1985 AL Most Valuable Player. He served as captain of the Yankees from 1991 through 1995, when he retired as a player. The Yankees later retired Mattingly's uniform number (23), making him the only Yankee to have his number retired without having won a World Series with the team. (Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag showing the size 42 sewn to the left outside front tail, appropriate style for use for the 1983 season. Team tagging "Mattingly 83 1" (which indicates player's name, 1983 season, and set 1) is hand chain stitched in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher onto a rectangular strip of gray knit fabric, and then sewn inside the back of the collar. It is properly stitched before the placket/collar lining was sewn closed, so that no stitching from the tagging is visible on the outside back of the jersey.

Wear & Repairs: It is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed multiple times; letters and numbers shows signs of puckering lettering edge-softening and and a few loose threads from repeated washing and player use. Jersey is original with no alterations, and appears to have been pulled from circulation and avoided a second life in the minor leagues as was so common with most Yankee jerseys of the period.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriate use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees during his rookie season of 1983.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Tommy John New York Yankees 1986 Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: July 26, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0726J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: New York Yankees team specification Wilson size 46 with tapered tailoring seven-button home pinstriped jersey. Yankees' NY crest stitched in Navy Blue to the left front chest, player number 25 on back in the proper font, color, and the correct 5 1/2" from the collar. Jersey placket is lined with linen for player comfort. The jersey is autographed on the front left tail "Best Wishes Tommy John #25" I have no professional opinion on the signature. There is a black armband on the right sleeve commemorating the death of Roger Maris, as was worn by the team in 1986. Tommy John, known as "The Bionic Man" due to his groundbreaking ligament replacement elbow surgery that caused him to miss the 1975 season, had a remarkable 26 year career. He was the first player to ever return to the majors after the surgery that now informally bears his name. He was a four-time MLB All-Star and has the second most wins (288) of any pitcher since 1900 not in the Hall of Fame (Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Embroidered Wilson "Tailored Exclusively for Pro Teams" tagging in a style first seen in 1986 is sewn on the outside of the left front tail with size 46 flag tag pinched under its right border. This size is reasonable for John's use. Inside the neck is a white rectangular knit strip tag zig zag stitched in place with the code "Baylor 86 2" on it. The tag bears the identifiable and unmistakable chain stitched handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher of the time. Baylor had been on the Yankees 1983-1985, and went to 1986 spring training with the Yankees before being traded to the Red Sox just two weeks before the start of the season. John had just rejoined the Yankees, having had played there prior in 1979-1982. Baylor's departure left John's preferred #25 jersey available for his use, and according to his own statement, he assumed Baylor's jersey and played the season in it.

Provenance: The jersey is accompanied by a letter on Tommy John's professional stationary that describes the origin of this jersey and certifies that he wore it during the 1986 season. The letter is signed by John, though I have no professional opinion on the signature.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows signs of wear that are appropriate for game use. The twill lettering is burnished, slightly puckered and has edges softened by use and the wash; the jersey has been laundered to a slightly off-white color, and there are small pulls throughout. The tagging is wrinkled and puckered; the edges of the tailoring flag tab is frayed. The linen placket lining shows clear signs of wear, with creases, puckering and slight yellowing consistent with game use and laundering.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good used condition, is properly lettered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a tagging identifiable and consistent with other exemplars. It is my considered opinion that this jersey shows use and was made by Wilson to team specifications first for Don Baylor, then was worn by Tommy John of the 1986 New York Yankees.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Don Mattingly New York Yankees 1987 Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: April 27, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0427J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: New York Yankees team specification Wilson size 42 seven-button home pinstriped jersey. Yankees' NY crest stitched in Navy Blue to the left front chest, player number 23 on back in the proper font, color, and the correct 5 1/2" from the collar. Jersey placket is lined with linen for player comfort. There is no maker's logo stitched on the sleeve as was the Yankees' arrangement with MLB, exempting them from displaying any brand logo on game uniforms. Notably, team-specification Yankees jerseys of this period were hard to acquire as the team seemingly shunned the collector market. Retail authentics were made in comparatively small quantities by Rawlings in 1987 and had a sleeve logo.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Embroidered Wilson "Tailored Exclusively for Pro Teams" tagging in a style first seen in 1986 is sewn on the outside of the left front tail with size 42 flag tag pinched under the right border. This size is correct for Mattingly's use. Inside the neck is a white rectangular knit strip tag zig zag stitched in place with the code "23 87 2" on it. A faint ruled red line is drawn in pen horizontally across the bottom third of the tag as a guide for the stitcher to embroider his numbers. The tag bears the identifiable and unmistakable chain stitched handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher of the time. While the tag appears legitimate, it does not match exemplars from our reference library that are on every other 1987 Yankee jersey in our database; those all have the last name of the player in script, followed by the two-digit year and the set number. (See examples below). While it is possible that this jersey was sewn in a separate order from the others that were presumably issued at the start if the season, and therefore has different style tagging, we have no other examples of 1987 Yankees jerseys team tagged in this way. Though we did not perform a complete photo matching exercise, this jersey is not pictured in the half dozen or so photos of Mattingly in 1987 found in the library of Getty Images.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows signs of wear that can easily be attributed to game use. The twill lettering is burnished and has edges softened by use and the wash, the jersey has been laundered to an off-white color, and there are small pulls and stains throughout. The linen placket lining shows the clearest signs of wear, with puckering and yellowing consistent with game use. Other dirt stains on the front of the jersey could be from improper storage.

Pictured above and below: Typical examples of 1987 Yankee jersey team tagging from other authenticated jerseys sold at auction.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a tagging identifiable as done by Wilson in their shop, though the format of the tag is different from multiple examples in our library. It is my considered opinion that this jersey shows use and was made by Wilson to team specifications for Don Mattingly of the 1987 New York Yankees.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Andy Pettitte 1996 New York Yankees Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J23

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1996 six-button size 48, full weight knit, Russell-made pinstriped New York Yankees #46 (Andy Pettitte), white with Navy pinstripes jersey. The Yankees "NY" crest is sewn to the left chest. The player number is sewn to the back in the correct color and font for the 1996 Yankees. The 1996 World Series patch is sewn with a straight stitch to the left sleeve, the Mel Allen memorial black armband is on the right sleeve. The jersey is autographed on the upper left chest above the team crest. I have no opinion on the autograph, but a Beckett Letter of Authenticity referencing the autograph is included.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Diamond Collection manufacturer tagging sewn on the outside left front tail that is consistent with the the year of issue. Below the manufacturer locker tag is a rectangular mylar tag with PETTITTE - 96 computer-printed on it, consistent with other 1996 Yankees jerseys in our reference archives. Also sewn pinched below the manufacturer tag are two small fabric flag tabs:"100% Polyester" and one that reads 2" extra length. As is correct for team-issued Yankees jerseys, contractually there is no Russell manufacturer logo embroidered on the sleeve end.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching is original and unaltered. The team and tailoring tagging flags are still crisp and unworn, While it has a World Series patch on its sleeve, we do not have evidence of him wearing this particular jersey in the Series. The team issued players new uniforms for the post season but often put patches on a regular season jersey to have as a backup should it be needed. Evidence of use and washing is slight.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent lightly worn condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging and very light wear. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made for and worn by Andy Pettitte of the 1996 New York Yankees.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Authenticity

1995 Derek Jeter New York Yankees Game Used Road Debut Jersey

Examination Date: January 17, 2020 Certification Number: 200117F7

This letter will serve as the opinion of Sports Investors Authentication LLC regarding the item in review.

Description: New York Yankees Russell size 46, full-weight knit six button road gray jersey, "NEW YORK" arched on front, #2 on back both in Navy Blue outlined with white. Navy/white/Navy knit sleeve end trim sewn in. Jersey is autographed on left front "Derek Jeter Game Used 5-29-96 MLB Debut" (SIA has no opinion on the authenticity of the autograph). Jersey is affixed with two Steiner Memorabilia hologram stickers on the locker tag on front. A Steiner Collectables Letter of Authenticity accompanies the jersey. Jeter was an emergency May, 1995 call-up when shortstop Tony Fernandez and backup Pat Kelly were both injured. The team was on the road at the time, and rather than getting a brand new jersey, Jeter received a hurriedly made one made from a 1994 issue cast-off Bernie Williams road jersey.

Photo Match/Provenance: Sports Investors Authentication conclusively matched Derek Jeter wearing this exact jersey in his 1995 call-up season. We were able to reference several unique identifiers in order to conclusively match this jersey. In addition jersey comes with a Steiner Letter of Authenticity referencing that this jersey was worn for Jeter's 1995 call up season

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: Russell Diamond Collection tail tagging in the proper style for the period, sewn on the outside left tail. As is correct for Yankees on-field jerseys, there is no Russell logo branding on the sleeve, and no size tag inside the neck. Beneath the Russell locker tag is sewn a rectangular piece of white cloth with very faded dot matrix printing on it that says: "51 B. Williams 94" beneath that tag is a flag of white fabric on which is printed, 100% POLYESTER. These tagging characteristics match exemplars in our database.

www.sportsinv.com Sports Investors Authentication info@sportsinv.com

Letter of Authenticity

1995 Derek Jeter New York Yankees Game Used Road Debut Jersey

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in good condition, displaying a great deal of use and wash wear. A light table examination clearly shows the shadow of the removed 1994 MLB 125th Anniversary sleeve patch, and faintly shows the shadows of the removed #51 on back, Bernie Williams' number. Thick crusty glue remnants on the left sleeve show where the "7" memorial worn in 1995 for Mickey Mantle had been, and there are distinct markings of the presence of the black armband, also now removed. The tags on the jersey all have frayed edges from repeated washing, and the fact that the 1995 memorials have been removed suggest that this jersey may have again been re-used for the following Spring Training. Notably, the player number "2" sewn to the back is rather sloppily stitched on, not up to the normal standards of Russell for team jerseys stitched in their shop. Instead, this is typical of a clubhouse stitching job, and it was likely hurriedly done on the road, perhaps even using a take-off number from another jersey carried in the the trainer's kit of team emergency extras.

Regarding the armband: notable in game photos, Jeter's was sewn on somewhat puckered and visibly crooked, rising higher of the outside surface of the sleeve than on the underside. Again, these are reasonable signs of a clubhouse rush job. The crooked armband shadow and the placement of the memorial "7" exactly match game photos overlaid in our photo-matching process.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use and wash wear, and its alterations are all explainable and reasonable. Its authenticity is bolstered by Jeter's inscription on front and the LOA from Steiner Auctions, as well as being photo-matched. Therefore, it is the considered opinion of Sports Investors Authentication that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Derek Jeter of the New York Yankees during his 1995 call-up season.

David Randolph
Managing Member

Bill Henderson
Lead Authenticator

www.sportsinv.com Sports Investors Authentication info@sportsinv.com

Photo Match Evaluation

1995 Derek Jeter New York Yankees Game Used Road Jersey

This letter will serve as the opinion of Sports Investors Authentication, LLC regarding the item in review.

Derek Jeter in the 1995 Wild Card game on October 1, 1995.

We used multiple photos from different angles in order to conclusively photo match this jersey to being worn by Derek Jeter in the 1995 season.

Pink translucent overlay below shows alignment of shadows of the removed armband and "7" memorial overlaid on game photo.

Light table image highlights the shadows of the removed #51 of Bernie Williams from the examined jersey.

Examination Date: January 1, 2020 Certification Number: 200101D1

www.sportsinv.com Sports Investors Authentication info@sportsinv.com

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Don Mattingly 1995 New York Yankees Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: February 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J26

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1995 New York Yankees Size 44, Russell full-weight double-knit six button road jersey, #23 issued to Don Mattingly. All elements match Yankees 1995 team issue specs. Navy/white/Navy knit sewn-in sleeve end trim, "NEW YORK" arched on the front in Navy outlined with white. Wilson Varsity "23" on the back in the same colors, sewn the team-spec 5 1/2" from the collar. the size of this jersey is appropriate for Mattingly. Memorial #7 stitched to the left sleeve, with a 1995-spec 3/4" black armband (armbands are usually 1", 1995's was 3/4' and sewn with a very tight 1/4 gap to the sleeve end trim; perhaps narrower trim was used because of the dual memorials used that year.) The jersey is signed by the player in black Sharpie on the left front panel below the team wordmark. I have no opinion on the autograph.

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: As is correct with Yankees jerseys of this vintage, there is no embroidered Russell logo on the sleeve. There is no tag inside the neck, instead, a small 100% Polyester flag tab is pinch-sewn under the bottom edge of the locker tag, a hallmark for team issued jerseys. Also pinched below and sewn around its perimeter is a white mylar-fabric tag with MATTINGLY-95 computer-printed on it in slightly faded black ink. All of these aspects match exemplars for 1995 Yankees team-used road jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original and unaltered. The jersey is in very good condition, and shows signs of use; the flag tags and year/player tag are curled and frayed from laundering. The stitching has come loose along the bottom of the year tag.There is some minor puckering of the back numbers; there are a few small pulls in the fabric, and it has softened from use and washing, but overall the jersey is well preserved and is bright and clean.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars, has no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and sewn to team issued specifications and worn by Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees during the 1995 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Alfonso Soriano 2001 New York Yankees Home Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: December 17. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1217J05

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2001 New York Yankees Alfonso Soriano #33, Russell" full weight knit, size 46 white pinstripe jersey. The Yankees "NY" crest is sewn to the left chest. The player number is sewn to the back in the correct color and font. The American League 2001 100th Anniversary is sewn to the left sleeve. The jersey is autographed on the front under the NY crest in blue Sharpie, and a serialized tag referring to the autograph is attached to the back of the size tag, branded by the National Sports Autograph Network. (I have no opinion on authenticity of the autograph.)

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: Russell "Authentic Collection" manufacturer tagging sewn on the outside left front tail consistent in style with the the year of issue, 2001. The MLB Silhouetted batter patch in red, white, and blue (the tag colors used by the Yankees 2000-2009) is stitched to the outside back of the collar. 2001 Yankees jerseys are not team tagged, but team issues have no neck flag tag, and instead have the size marked on a small white mylar-cloth flag tag also printed with "100% Polyester" pinched beneath the locker tag on the tail. These aspects are consistent with other 2001 Yankees jerseys in our reference archive. Also sewn below the manufacturer tag is another flag tab: '2" Extra Length', tailoring that appears consistent with other Soriano jerseys in our exemplar library. As is correct for team-issued Yankees jerseys there is no Russell manufacturer logo embroidered on the sleeve end. This jersey lacks the back of neck flag patch and the black armband that were added to Yankees in field jerseys after the events of 9/11.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching is original and unaltered. The team and tailoring tagging flags show fading from wash wear that is consistent with use. There is some minor softening/fraying of the edges of the back numbers.

Conclusion: While we did not attempt to perform a conclusive photo match of this jersey, looking at the images of Soriano in the Getty Images database it is clear by distinguishing elements that he wore multiple jerseys in 2001, prior to 9/11, and that the alignment of several elements: the back numbers, front crest, buttonhole alignment on the placket, pinstripe alignment at the placket closure, sleeve patch and back-of-neck Silhouetted Batter patch may match details seen in several photos.

The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriate use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Alfonso Soriano of the New York Yankees during the 2001 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Masahiro Tanaka 2014 New York Yankees Road Jersey

Examination Date: December 8. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1217J06

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2014 New York Yankees Size 52, Majestic Cool Base six button road jersey, #19 issued to pitcher Masahiro Tanaka. All elements match Yankees 2014 team issue specs. Navy/white/Navy knit sewn-in sleeve end trim, "NEW YORK" arched on the front in Navy outlined with white. 2014 was the first year that Yankees road jerseys were available to players made in Cool Base fabric, issued only upon player request. Wilson Varsity "19" on the back in the same colors, sewn the team-spec 5 1/2" from the collar. Navy/white/silver silhouetted batter patch on the outside back of the neck. Tanaka started 20 games in 2014, going 13-5. At 6' 3" and 215 lbs, the size of this jersey is reasonably appropriate for Tanaka.

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: The outside left front tail has the Cool Base style heat-pressed Majestic Authentic collection label, with the size tag "52" integral to the label. As is correct with Yankees jerseys of this vintage, there is no embroidered Majestic logo on the sleeve. On the inside seam is sewn the Majestic cloth/Mylar tag with the team-issue spec code "0630" printed on it, which decodes to team-issued-specification and Cool Base fabric construction. Pinched and layered with the inside seam tag is a mylar tag with "2014" printed on it. On the outside tail, a Yankees serialization label is applied, with a barcode and the serial number 0000004774. Notably- there are no MLB or Steiner hologram labels on this jersey. By 2014 we would note that Steiner serialization of Yankees jerseys was nearly universal on certifiable game-worn jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is in very good condition, and shows some signs of washing; all garment tags are curled and frayed from laundering. There is some minor yellowing of the white twill layer. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars, and appears to have no alterations of any kind and came directly from the New York Yankees. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and sewn to team issued specifications for Masahiro Tanaka of the New York Yankees during the 2014 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Mariano Rivera New York Yankees 1996 Negro League Tribute Game Uniform

Examination Date: February 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J19

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray Russell size 44 full weight knit jersey and matching size 34 waist pants, issued to pitcher Mariano Rivera for the Yankees June 8, 1996 Negro Leagues Tribute game, when the team appeared as the 1934 New York Black Yankees. This is a significant uniform because on this date, for the first time in their history, the Yankees broke from their strongly-held tradition of wearing only their regular home and road uniforms agreeing to wear a special uniform on the field. The Yankees played the Detroit Tigers who suited up as the Negro League Detroit Stars. Gray jersey with extra-long sleeves, navy soutache rings the sleeve ends and the placket. "YANKEES" is spelled out in a stylized font arched across both front panels. Player number 42 on the reverse in an ornate old-time font used for this game. In only his second season with the Yankees, Rivera did not appear in this game. Jersey is signed by the player on the front left below the wordmark. I have no opinion on the authenticity of the autograph. Matching gray pants have seven belt loops, a two snap front and zipper closure, two slash pockets on the rear and similar soutache stitched down the sides of each leg with elastic at the bottom of each leg hole.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag noting the size as 44 is stitched to the outside bottom front left tail. Pinch-sewn beneath it are two flag tags, one says 100% polyester, the other + 3" sleeve length. A sticker on the back of these tags assigns serial number A257456 from the National Sports Autograph Network. There is no accompanying certificate with this jersey. The lack of a size flag inside the back of the collar, and the presence of the small 100% Polyester tab under the locker tag are hallmarks of jerseys made for team issue vs. those made for retail sale. To our knowledge, the only jerseys in this style that exist are the ones the players wore in the game. All others we have seen are similarly autographed, and we believe they were all auctioned after the game. The pants are

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Russell tagged as Diamond Collection size 34, and have a computer printed sewn in label in the waistband that reads RIVERA 34-32-96 (waist 34, inseam 32, 1996). There is no player-specific tagging in the the jersey, which we believe to be correct.

Wear & Repairs: These uniforms were worn for a single game, and this uniform shows only a few tiny fabric pulls and no signs of wash wear. It is possible that it has never been washed, especially since Rivera did not play in the game. A light table evaluation shows that all sewn elements are original and untampered with.

Conclusion: The uniform in review is in excellent condition, and has appropriate wear for having been worn once. It is properly lettered and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind and has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this uniform was made to team specifications and worn by Mariano Rivera of the 1996 New York Yankees.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion/Restoration

Oscar Gamble 1980 New York Yankees Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: May 6. 2024 Certification Number: 24-0506J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1980 New York Yankees, seven-button home pinstripe knit jersey. The Yankees "NY" wordmark in Navy twill is sewn to the left chest. Number 17 in one color Navy tackle twill with no name on the back in the proper font/size correct for the Yankees in the 1980 season, and the correct 5 1/2" from the collar. Jersey has the correct 1 1/8" pinstripe spacing properly used in 1980, as opposed to the 1" spacing used in 1981 and after. Size 40 is reasonable for Gamble to have worn; it matches multiple exemplars for him at this period of his career, and reasonable for him at 5' 11" and 165 lbs The inside of the placket is lined with linen for player comfort.

As received, this jersey has the clear ghost of a removed armband on the left sleeve end, which I restored at the request of the owner. Armbands were worn for Thurman Munson after 8/2/1979 and all through the 1980 season. It is not unusual for armbands or other year-specific patches to be removed from Yankee jerseys at the end of a season, as jerseys were regularly reissued for use in spring training, used as backup jerseys for the next season or were sent to the minor leagues. Gamble had a part-time role on the 1980 Yankees, appearing in 78 games and hit .278 with 14 home runs. His career spanned 17 years with seven teams, including two stints with the Yankees.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson was the exclusive maker of the Yankees' home jerseys in 1980. The small rectangular Wilson manufacturer/size tag noting the size as 40, is in the proper style as typically used 1978-1985 season. The tag is correctly stitched on the outside left front tail. "Gamble 80 1" is hand chain stitched in the Wilson factory tailor's familiar handwriting onto a white knit rectangular strip of fabric in a style consistent with other examples of 1980 Yankees home jerseys in our archives. The strip is then stitched into the inside back of the collar. Appropriately, the tagging has been stitched to the placket so that the zig zag stitches are not visible from the outside back of the collar. This was done at the factory, with the team tagging added prior to the collar flap being stitched closed. There is no team year tagging on the tails of Yankee jerseys in 1980.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitched elements of this jersey are original. When I received this, the back numbers were loosely held on by stitching that was failing. Without removing any of the original threads, I re-stitched the numbers only where necessary to re-secure then to the jersey. The jersey was very dirty and badly stained, almost certainly from improper storage and not exclusively game use. As a part of its rehabilitation, I pre-treated and soaked the garment before laundering it to remove the dirt and stains, and it came mostly clean. While it remains in overall good condition, it is clear that this jersey has seen a great deal of use; The placket lining cleaned up beautifully but still shows signs of sweat staining and puckering from use. The original buttons remain in place. I would judge that this jersey was used all season, and may have been used by Gamble again as a back-up jersey after 1980, as he remained with the Yankees through the 1984 season.

Above, Exemplar tagging

Above, sleeve showing clear ghost of the removed Munson armband.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use and wash wear, and aside from the restoration of the armband application and the reinforcing of the back number stitching, has no other alterations. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Oscar Gamble of the New York Yankees during the 1980 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Back

Letter of Restoration/Letter of Professional Opinion

Yogi Berra 1977 New York Yankees Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: October 19, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1019J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 7-button knit gray size 44 Wilson-made New York Yankees jersey issued to and worn by Yankees coach Yogi Berra. "NEW YORK" crest is arched across the front in navy with a white outline in the 1977-appropriate font. Number "8" in two color navy and white tackle twill with no name on the back is correct as well. Sewn-in Navy/white/navy knit sleeve end trim. Size 44 is correct for Berra. As is consistent with Wilson jerseys, the inside of the placket is lined with linen for player comfort. The jersey is autographed in black just above the Wilson tag on the front left tail. I haver no professional opinion on the autograph's authenticity.

After a storied, 19-year (1946-1965) Hall of Fame career (the first 18 with the Yankees; his final season with the Mets), in 1976, he rejoined the Yankees as a coach. That year the team won its first of three consecutive AL titles, as well as the 1977 World Series and 1978 World Series, and (as had been the case throughout his playing days) Berra's reputation as a lucky charm was reinforced. Casey Stengel once said of his catcher, "He'd fall in a sewer and come up with a gold watch." (Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturer tag size 44, appropriate in style for use for the 1977 season, is sewn onto the front outside left tail of the jersey. Team collar tagging "Berra" is hand chain stitched in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher onto a rectangular strip of gray knit fabric, and then sewn properly inside the back of the collar with stitching correctly invisible from the outside back. The tag is original and unaltered. 1977 Yankees jerseys had two versions of tagging, some had player name only; others had name, 2 digit year and set number.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that the tagging and all lettering on this jersey are original and without alteration. It is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed multiple times; Wilson tagging, letters and numbers show signs of burnishing from washing and use. The jersey' linen placket lining shows some yellowing and wear commensurate with use. The fonts on both front and back are exact matches to other 1977 Yankees road jerseys in our reference library. Notably, this jersey was pulled from use and preserved; the vast majority of team issued Yankees' jerseys from this season were stripped of their front crests and sent to the minor leagues to be repurposed.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriate use. It is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Yogi Berra of the New York Yankees during the 1977 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Clete Boyer 1988 New York Yankees (Coach) Game Jersey

Examination Date: November 2, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1102J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1988 seven-button size 46, full weight knit, Wilson-made gray New York Yankees road jersey of coach Clete Boyer. Navy/white/navy knit sleeve ends, NEW YORK arched on front in Navy Blue over white. On back is the number 57 which is a replacement. The light table reveals that this jersey originally wore #40, which was Boyer's number in 1988 (Wikipedia). As is typical of Wilson jerseys, the placket is lined with linen for player comfort. Size 46 is consistent with other jerseys attributed to Boyer, post-playing career.

Boyer had played third base for the Yankees 1959-1966. After retirement as a player, he returned as a coach for the Yankees during Billy Martin's several managerial tenures with the club. Clete was the brother of Cardinal star Ken Boyer, Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson "Prestige Teams" manufacturer tagging sewn on the outside left front tail that is consistent with the the year of issue. Pinch-sewn under the side of the tag is a small size tab noting the jersey as a size 46. Inside the back of the neck is a rectangular double-knit gray tag with BOYER-88-2 machine embroidered in Navy script, tagging sewn in place prior to the placket of the jersey being sewn closed as is correct for team issue. This tagging consistent with other 1988 Yankees jerseys in our reference archives. Contractually there is no manufacturer logo embroidered on the sleeve end. The jersey has a tiny STEINER Yankees Collection hologram sticker on the front tail tag. Steiner provided distribution for Yankee game jerseys in this period. The label is not serialized.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching on front and the team and manufacturer tagging is original and unaltered. The back number has been replaced with numbers that are not the exactly correct font for the MLB Yankees, this was likely a spring training reissue. The tagging is wrinkled from use, indicating multiple washings.There are a couple of stains on the back of the left sleeve. The jersey is free from damage and is in very good, used condition.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition with a number change on back, and appears to have no other alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging and moderate wear. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made for and worn by coach Clete Boyer of the 1988 New York Yankees.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion

Chris Hammond 2003 New York Yankees Game Used Road Jersey, World Series

Examination Date: November 26, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1126J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Majestic road gray, size 50 (marked and measured), six-button full-weight knit, #39 New York Yankees jersey. "NEW YORK" is arched in tackle twill across the front in Navy with a white outline in the period-appropriate font. Number "39" in two color Navy and white tackle twill with no name on the back is correct for the Yankees. A light table evaluation shows that the numbers on back are original. The Yankees' 100th Anniversary patch is stitched to the left sleeve, and the 2003 World Series patch is on the right sleeve. The jersey has two flag tags noting special tailoring: +2" extra length and -1" body taper. Examples of other Hammond game jerseys have proven elusive, but the size is reasonable for the 6' 1" 195 lb. Player. The jersey length is 33" from the top of the collar to the end of the back tail. This does not reflect the additional length as marked on the tag. The lack of body taper is noted.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: A period-correct Majestic Authentic Collection manufacturer tag, with both size "50" and a white 100% polyester tab, along with the two aforementioned special tailoring tags, are sewn into the front outer left tail of the jersey. As is correct for on-field Yankees jerseys of this vintage, there is no Majestic logo embroidered to the sleeve. A rectangular cloth tag is straight stitched below the jock tag with "2003" printed on it, matching exemplars. Normally, on the inside side seam, a white garment style tag would be pinch-sewn, showing the model number of the garment, however this tag is missing and is most likely a result of the garment being taper tailored as noted. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in red-white-blue is stitched to the back of the neck, as used by the Yankees 2000-2009. There is a tiny, unserialized Steiner tag adhered to the jock tag on this jersey to support its origin; generally game-worn Yankees jerseys from this time have such a sticker. This time period pre-dates the bar coding of team-issued jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: It is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times; the lettering and numbers shows signs of puckering, heavy wash-burnishing and frayed fibers around the edges from repeated use. The wash-wear to the tagging is significant, the bottom edge of the team year tag has come loose; this jersey has clearly received a full-season of use. The Yankees appeared in the 2003 World Series, and while the team was issued a new set of uniforms for the postseason, it was not uncommon to have postseason event patches sewn on a regular season jersey in case a backup jersey was needed. As such, it is unlikely that this jersey was worn in the Series, but not impossible.

Conclusion: I would conclude that this is the 2003 regular-season game-used jersey of Yankees pitcher Chris Hammond with the 2003 World Series patch likely added to make it available as a backup jersey. It shows strong use, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has the proper characteristics to be team issued. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Chris Hammond of the 2003 New York Yankees.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

Letter of Professional Opinion

Dick Howser (Coach) 1973 New York Yankees Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: December 8. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1217J09

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 7-button knit gray size 40 knit New York Yankees jersey issued to and worn by third base coach Dick Howser. "NEW YORK" is arched in tackle twill across the front in navy with a white outline in the 1973-appropriate font. His number "34" in two color navy and white tackle twill with no name on the back is correct as well. Back numbers are widely spaced as was typical of 1973 issues. Sewn-in Navy/white/navy knit sleeve end trim. The jersey is lined inside the placket with white linen, typical of Wilson-made Yankee knit jerseys. 1973 was the first year that the team wore double-knit jerseys, replacing their traditional flannels. The Yankees were among the last teams in baseball to switch away from flannels.

Dick Howser enjoyed an eight year MLB career 1961-1968 as an infielder for the Athletics, Indians and Yankees. He is best known for managing the Kansas City Royals during the 1980s and leading them to their first championship in 1985. Following his playing career, he immediately joined the Yankees as their third base coach for ten seasons, 1969- 1978.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag size 40, appropriate for use for the 1973 season, is sewn onto the front outside left tail of the jersey. Team collar tagging "Howser 73 Set 1" is hand chain stitched in navy embroidery thread in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher, onto a rectangular strip of gray knit fabric, and then sewn properly inside the back of the collar with stitching invisible from the outside back. The tag is original and unaltered.

Restoration Performed: Typical of Yankees jerseys of the 1970s, this one was certainly sent to the minor leagues when its MLB service was through. The MLB "New York" wordmark was stripped and replaced by "Yankees". In 1974, the Yankees had four minor league clubs, and three of them were named "Yankees". The back numbers are original and remain untouched on the jersey. Stripping the minor league front lettering, the ghost of the 1973 NEW YORK wordmark was clearly evident. The jersey was hand laundered. Using the original team pattern, I recreated it, then aged it with media blasting and organic dyeing and stitched it exactly overtop the original ghosts using off-white thread to make it better match the patina of the rest of the aged garment.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that the back numbers on this jersey is original and without alteration. It is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times; the numbers show signs of minor puckering, fading, burnishing and loose threads from repeated washing and use. The jersey' linen placket lining shows dirt and wear commensurate with at least a season's worth of use.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Top: As received. Back numbers are original, but front crest has been replaced for minor league use. Below, with the MiLB crest removed, the ghosts of the original font crest are evident.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits good use. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by coach Dick Howser of the 1973 New York Yankees.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 41

All-Star Game BP/Home Run Derby

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

1933 – The First All-Star Game

The paragraphs below are excerpted from Baseball Almanac https://www.baseball-almanac.com/asgbox/yr1933as.shtml

Baseball's newest contribution to the romance of American sports, the All-Star Game, made its debut on July 6, 1933, at Chicago's Comiskey Park. It was initiated at the insistence of Arch Ward, a sports editor for the Chicago Tribune, to coincide with the celebration of the city's "Century of Progress" Exposition. By the 1930's, baseball had already established itself as America's favorite pastime and the national exposition provided the perfect stage to introduce baseball's best to the rest of the country. Many did not believe that a contest of this magnitude could possibly live up to the fans' expectations, especially for those who lived in the far western states and had never been to a Major League baseball game.

The novel idea of a single game made up of the most exciting assemblage of ball-playing talent ever brought together on the diamond at one time, seemed too good to be true. In 1933 and 1934, All-Star teams were selected by the managers and the fans. The National League's manager John McGraw and American League's Connie Mack were chosen to lead a line-up of big hitters including Lou Gehrig, Jimmie Foxx, Al Simmons and the one and only Babe Ruth. "We wanted to see the Babe," said Bill Hallahan, the National League starter. "Sure, he was old and had a big waistline, but that didn't make any difference. We were on the same field as Babe Ruth."

With fellow All-Star Charlie Gehringer on first in the bottom of the third, The Babe drove one into the right-field stands, the first homer in All-Star history. The crowd, according to one account, "roared in acclamation" and the first All-Star Game, won by the American League on the strength of Ruth's homer, was a resounding success.

Left: Carl Hubbell of the Giants and Lefty Grove of the Philadelphia A's. In the first All-Star game in 1933, the NL All-Stars wore special "National League" jerseys, while their AL counterparts wore their own team home jerseys. Beginning the next year, both teams wore their own jerseys, and have continued to do so ever since.

Special thanks to Rob Holecko, who assisted with the research for this chapter

© GameWornGuides.com

© GameWornGuides.com

All-Star Game Attire

1974 AMERICAN LEAGUE ALL-STAR TEAM - Seated in front: Greg Diulus, batboy. Bottom row: Bobby Murcer, Cookie Rojas, Bobby Grich, Jack McKeon, coach; Earl Weaver, coach; Dick Williams, manager; Whitey Herzog, coach; Brooks Robinson, Al Kaline, Dave Chalk, Carlton Fisk (on injured list). Middle row: Frank Robinson, George Hendrick, Jeff Burroughs, Bert Campaneris, John Hiller, Reggie Jackson, Darrell Porter, Thurman Munson, Jim Sundberg, Carl Yastrzemski, Don Money, John Mayberry, Freddie Frederico, trainer. Top row: Jackie Moore, batting practice pitcher; Luis Tiant, Joe Rudi, Jim Hunter, Wilbur Wood, Rod Carew, Rollie Fingers, Mike Cuellar, Gaylord Perry, Steve Busby, Harry Dunlop, batting practice catcher. (Dick Allen was absent when photo was taken.)

Aside from that first All-Star Game in 1933 where the NL team wore common jerseys, the "Midsummer Classic" has long featured a symphony of colors and styles, with each team member wearing the full home or road uniform of his regular team. This is unlike any other team event in American sports. For those of us growing up in the 1970s and 1980s, scenes like the ones on this page are what the Baseball All-Star Game was all about. How proud we were to see OUR players on the field on OUR uniforms during the game!

Because it is considered an exhibition contest and not a league game, players are allowed to wear some uniform accessories that they normally are not. Most notably are the wild selection of shoes one sees in the game… for many years it has seemed that every player used the contest as a chance to wear non-team issued white shoes.

© GameWornGuides.com

Claimed 1977 All-Star Batting Practice

All I know about this jersey is presented right here. It is autographed and was auctioned represented as a BP jersey from the 1977 All-Star Game. Everything on this jersey is screened on. I would note that 1977 was about the very first year that any team started wearing team-issued warm-ups for any reason. I see no mention of its manufacturer, and no tagging is visible I cannot comment to the authenticity of this, and we will continue to look for other examples.

The LIVE Auction is open for online pre-bidding until Monday, September 18 at 10pm EST . High Bids & Ceiling Bids placed during the pre-bidding period will be executed competitively during the Live Auction. Additional arrangements for phone & absentee bidding are being accepted at 610.524.0822 or info@huntauctions.com.

Lot Number: 25

Description: Mike Schmidt autographed professional model batting practice jersey attributed to c.1977 All-Star Game. Wilson size L pullover jersey with "National" across the front, along with "SCHMIDT" and #20 on the back. Schmidt signed the front in silver marker rating 8 out of 10, and signed the back in blue marker rating 6/7 out of 10. Minor stains on the back numbers. Originally obtained by a collector who received items directly from players and team employees in the period, and includes letter of provenance from the original recipient and LOA from Hunt Auctions: EX/MT

Estimated Price Range: ($1,000-$2,000)

Current Bid: $ 1,100.00
Next Minimum Bid: $ 1,210.00
Enter either the Next Minimum Bid or your Ceiling/Maximum Bid.
Your Bid: $ SUBMIT

© GameWornGuides.com

1982-83 All-Star Game Warm-ups?

I admit that I know nothing about these, except that Mitchell & Ness used to sell replicas of them at one point. They carry Sand-Knit tag that was used (by my estimation) in 1984-1985. I believe the front logo is screened on, not a patch. The tail tagging that says “1983 All-Star” mirrors the style of team tagging used by Sand-Knit for teams in those years. I haven’t a single photo that shows these being worn by players. The ones on the left inexplicably have the 1982 All-Star patch on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

1982-83 All-Star Game Warm-ups?

Photos of some more examples of these were unearthed by collector Steve Kraljic, including the first example we have seen of the red American League version. Everything on these jerseys is screened on, including the sleeve patches. The AL version has a crew-neck collar, unlike the V-Neck of the NL jersey. Recall that in the early 1980s, Sand Knit had limited rights to make "authentic replicas" prior to Rawlings getting the official nod for the 1987 season, as discussed in an earlier chapter. We can assume that their rights to make replica versions of the All-Star warm-ups. Whatever the circumstances, these certainly were not widely distributed, as examples are certainly uncommon, at best.

© GameWornGuides.com

Starting 1997: All-Star Game BP/Home Run Derby

In 1997, Major League Baseball introduced league-specific BP jersey for players to wear during warm ups before the All-Star game each year. The All-Star BP jerseys generally have reflected common design elements of the host team, such as host team colors, or player name and number fonts, and usually include the All-Star game logo/ patch somewhere on the uniform.

The Home Run Derby's participants wear the official All-Star BP jersey during that contest, and watching this popular televised event is where most people see the All-Star jerseys being worn.

From the first Home Run Derby in 1985 through 1996, All-Star participants wore their own team jerseys or BP gear.

Because I have not considered these "game jerseys," I did not include them in this guide in the past . However, the request to include them has been the single most frequent reader comment over the years.

On the pages that follow I will provide a look at the All-Star jerseys for both leagues from 1997 to 2025.

More information:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Home_Run_Derby

Right: Mark McGwire in the 1996 HR Derby contest in Philadelphia, wearing his Oakland A's uniform. This was the year before official All-Star jerseys were worn by all players.

© GameWornGuides.com

1997 All-Star BP

The AL jersey is red with navy front knit trim and the NL is the reverse, navy with red knit trim. Player -worn jerseys feature two-color Varsity lettering for the number and name on the back, retail versions often have one-color lettering.
The front wordmark incorporates the 1997 All-Star logo below the second “A” in “American” to the right side on the AL jersey, while the NL jersey has the logo to the left side, under the last “A” in National.
The jerseys feature the Jackie Robinson 50th Anniversary patch on the right sleeve and the player’s team patch on the left sleeve. The only thing “borrowed” from the host Cleveland Indians are the team colors of red and blue.
Note that the 1997 All-Star jersey does not include the same All-Star patch worn by the host Indians on their uniforms during the season.

© GameWornGuides.com

1998 All-Star BP

The AL jersey is black and the NL jersey is green, and both have purple knit trim on placket and the sleeve ends. For 1998, the jersey again uses standard Block name lettering and Varsity numbers, this time both are two-color, white/ purple. Material is a shiny lightweight micromesh knit fabric.

The jerseys feature the 1998 All-Star Game logo patch on the right sleeve and the player's team patch on the left sleeve.

Both jerseys feature a Colorado Rockies mountain logo element for the second "A" in the front wordmark . Retail jerseys often have single-color lettering.

© GameWornGuides.com

1999 All-Star BP

The 1999 version of the All-Star jerseys are sleeveless vests with contrasting-color undershirts.
The AL jersey is red with a navy undershirt, while the NL is the reverse. These jerseys use a distinctive vertical lettering style in metallic silver twill with the same theme as the “Turn Ahead The Clock” jerseys of the same year, and the same font as used in that game by the White Sox and a couple of others. These jerseys feature a 1999 All-Star Game logo appliqué on the right front, but oddly not the one the Red Sox players had been wearing on their sleeves all season.

Another different All-Star game logo is screened on the undershirt left sleeve. The player’s team patch is smaller and in an unusual place-on the back below the collar.

© GameWornGuides.com

2000 All-Star BP

Sleeveless vests are used again in 2000. The AL jersey is red with navy undershirt sleeves. The NL is again navy with red undershirt sleeves. Again, a stylized font is used for player numbers which are extra tall.

The jerseys also feature shoulder seam piping in the contrasting (navy-red, red-navy) color. The player's team logo is on the undershirt left sleeve, This year the All-Star game logo patch does not appear at all on the BP jerseys, however the year "2000" is sewn in the style of the logo and appears on the front of both jerseys; above the "National" and below the "American" wordmarks.

© GameWornGuides.com

2001 All-Star BP

The 2001 jerseys are dark green for the AL and deep red for the NL. They use the same player number font as 2000. All jerseys feature the individual player's team logo on the right sleeve and the All-Star Game patch on the left sleeve. Both AL and NL jerseys feature white front and sleeve knit trim. The Mariners add their hometown touch by using their compass symbol in a vapor trail on the fronts of both teams' jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2002 All-Star BP

For the 2002 game in Milwaukee, team jerseys have a decidedly “Brewers” look. Blue for the National League and gold for the American League, the name and number on back are in the Brewers’ own lettering font (though in one-color only). The All-Star game patch is on the left sleeve and the player’s individual team patch on the right.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003 All-Star BP

The 2003 All-Star Game is hosted by the Chicago White Sox, and the team jerseys have several elements that are related to the team.

The National League jersey is black and the American League white, both with gray trim and lettering elements in White Sox colors. The front wordmarks are in an old-timey font that inspired by the National League's jerseys from the inaugural All-Star Game, also held in Chicago, in 1933 (a photo of that jersey is below for reference).

As in past years, the All-Star Game patch is on the left sleeve and the player's individual team patch is on the right.

The first Cool Base All-Star jerseys, these feature piping along the sleeve from the collar to the sleeve end and also have under-arm Cool Base style panels of a contrasting color.

Press reports of the time indicated that these were to be used in the game as well, just like the NL did 50 years prior. After player criticism, the idea was scrapped, and players wore their own team jerseys, as had been long-standing custom. MLB planned the same for 2004, but it did not come to pass.

A 1933 National League All-Star Game jersey, the inspiration for the font used on jersey fronts in 2003.

© GameWornGuides.com

2004 All-Star BP

The Astros host the 2004 All-Star game, and lend their 1965-1974 shooting star element to the National League jersey, and the prominent front chest star of their 1975-1993 uniform to the American League jersey.

The 2004 jerseys are black (American) and white (National) and use the Astros' brick red trim. The jerseys use a standard Block lettering style as they had in 2003. The lettering is sand/brick (AL) and brick/black (NL). The jerseys also feature red and beige striping along the sleeves from collar to cuff.

Once again, the All--Star Game patch is sewn on the left sleeve and the player's home team logo patch is on the right.

© GameWornGuides.com

2005 All-Star BP

In an odd touch, many players born outside the U.S. have their national flags sewn above the wordmark of their jerseys. In 2005, MLB is pushing baseball hard as an international sport, and this to me is a bit over the top.

The 2005 All-Star jerseys are in the colors of the host team Tigers, navy and orange. Standard white single-color lettering used for the player name, but a unique italic font number font for the number, navy /white (NL) and white/orange (AL). The All-Star Game patch remains sewn on the left sleeve and the player's home team logo patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2006 All-Star BP

Pittsburgh hosts the 2006 All-Star Game, and the team BP jerseys bear more than a passing resemblance to Pirates jerseys. Colors and fonts of both wordmarks and player numbers are all lifted right from the Pirates style book. Again, the All-Star patch is seen on the left sleeve, and the logo patch of the individual player's team is on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2007 All-Star BP

The 2007 All-Star jerseys are in orange and black, the colors of the host team, the San Francisco Giants. Standard black or white single-color lettering is used for the name, and a unique font that looks quite similar to the Cubs font is used for the player number, in either black or orange with white outlines. For the second year in a row, the jersey has a Cool Base-style under-arm panel.

The All-Star Game patch is retained on the left sleeve and the player's team logo patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2008 All-Star BP

The 2008 All-Star jerseys use the gray, navy and white scheme of the host team Yankees. The front wordmarks feature the subtle design element of the Yankee Stadium upper deck façade, and use the Yankees' Varsity style numbers on the reverse. Again the jersey features the Cool Base-style under-arm panel.

The All-Star Game patch remains on the left sleeve as has become the tradition, and the player's team logo patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2009 All-Star BP

The St. Louis Cardinals host the 2009 Midsummer Classic, and both of the teams' batting jerseys use a navy, red, blue-gray, and white scheme.

Names and numbers on back are in the same font as the Cardinals, and front wordmarks are in a Cardinals-like script, have a bat running across the front just like Cardinals' jerseys do, and both feature an image of the St. Louis arch. These jerseys have the Cool Base-style under-arm panel.

The official All-Star patch remains on the left sleeve and the player's team logo patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2010 All-Star BP

The 2010 All-Star BP jerseys borrow the navy and red color scheme of the hosting Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim. Player numbers are in the Angels' special font. Wordmarks for both leagues borrow the Angels' general wordmark style, and both feature a halo over the first letter of the word.

The All-Star Game patch is again sewn on the left sleeve and the player's team logo patch is again sewn on the right sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 All-Star Game: Collar Stars

07/01/11 11:44 AM ET
All-Stars to wear stars before the big game
By Mark Newman / MLB.com
For the first time, players chosen for the All-Star Game will be distinguished by uniform for regular season games. During the July 4-10 games leading up to the 2011 All-Star break, any players selected for the 82nd Midsummer Classic on July 12 in Phoenix will wear caps and jerseys adorned with stars. Rosters will be announced at noon ET Sunday during the 2011 MLB All-Star Game Selection Show Presented by Taco Bell on TBS.

Two gold stars, outlined with team colors, will be affixed to either side of the MLB silhouetted batter logo on the back of the jersey for all games July 4-10, as well as the back of the cap for all games July 5-10. You will be able to get this look, because during that tribute week, the MLB.com Shop will have those special-star MLB Authentic Collection jerseys from Majestic and caps from New Era.

In addition to the 66 players who are announced Sunday, fans will add the 34th men for each team via the 10th annual All-Star Game Final Vote Sponsored by Sprint. One player from the American League and one from the National League will be chosen from that ballot, which launches at 1 p.m. ET Sunday, and after being announced as winners at 5 p.m. ET on Thursday, they will have their uniforms distinguished with those stars for games through July 10.

Starting July 4, 2011, players who are selected for the 2011 MLB All-Star Game are eligible to wear small stars on their jersey collars, on either side of the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch. The jersey stars are gold with contrasting color outline specially matched for each team. Caps with plain gold stars without outlines and the 2011 All-Star Game patches for are also provided for the players.

Uni-Watch (my favorite source for all important news items such as this one) had reported that the Yankees and Cardinals refused to apply the stars, that Dodgers pitcher Clayton Kershaw did not want to wear the stars and asked them removed (after removing the stars from his hat by himself), and Orioles representative Matt Wieters, who removed his as a “team gesture” according to manager Buck Showalter. The idea was not repeated in subsequent years, though the stars were still worn for the All-Star Game only through 2016.

Star-less Yankees All-Star Derek Jeter

Indians’ Jersey Stars

(This page also appears in the Commemorative Patches Chapter)

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2016 All-Star Collar Stars as Worn in the All-Star Game

Through 2016, the stars are worn by players in the All-Star game itself. The stars are two-color and are color coded to match each team uniform. These two jerseys were ones actually worn in the All-Star Game. Notice that they have the All-Star patch on the right sleeve

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 All-Star BP

The 2011 All-Star BP jerseys use the color scheme of the host Arizona Diamondbacks. They used a unique lettering style, with single-color (black or red) names, and player numbers in the Diamondbacks' special font.

The All-Star Game patch remains on the left sleeve and the player's team logo patch was again on the right sleeve.

For the first time, a special patterned twill is used for player numbers on game jerseys, here resembling the skin of a Diamondback snake, for style, but also presumably to foil counterfeiters.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012 All-Star BP

The Kansas City Royals play host to the 2012 All-Star game, and following recent tradition, the BP jerseys borrow more than a few design elements from the host team's uniforms. In this case, jerseys in the Royals' "Atlantic Blue" with white trim were worn by the American League team. National League players wore royal blue jerseys with "Yankee Gray" side panels and trim.

The front wordmarks feature gold stars dotting the "I's." Official All-Star patch is sewn on the left sleeve, and each player's home team patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

Carrying over into 2012 is a special pattern being incorporated into the player numbers on the back of the uniforms, a trick first seen in 2011. The pattern for this year's game is a montage of baseball images associated with this year's contest. Crowns, stars and streaks; "KC" cap logos, silhouettes of baseball players, tiny baseball diamonds and the All-Star Game 2012 wordmark logo are hidden in there. Close-up details of that pattern is shown as background, here.

© GameWornGuides.com

2013 All-Star BP

The Mets host in 2013, and carrying on the theme, the official jerseys for the game have a Mets influence. Starting with the colors of blue and orange for the American Leaguers, reversed for the National League jersey. Player numbers are in the Mets' Block font, and both the All-Star patch and the jersey-front wordmark feature the New York skyline, the prominent element in the Mets team logo. The blue twill used for player numbers has a star-pattern throughout, as shown below.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 All-Star BP

The Twins play host to the 2014 game, and the jerseys are red and blue, the Twins major colors. One problem: Both teams' jerseys are red and blue–as shown to the left, only switched back-to-front depending which team they play for. This is just fine when everyone on the team is facing the same direction, but highly confusing when everyone is on the field together. Player name and number fonts are the same as used by the Twins, the official All-Star patch features the Minneapolis skyline and a silhouette of Target Field. But the jersey wordmark, for the first time since 2005, does not contain a noticeably "home team" design element. All-Star patch on the left sleeve, team patch on the right.

© GameWornGuides.com

2015 All-Star BP

Both leagues' jerseys carry the colors and player name/number fonts and design cues of the host Cincinnati Reds. Luckily, 2014's confusing back/front color switch scheme is not repeated. Jerseys are made using the Majestic BP jersey pattern, and tagged as "Cool Base." Front wordmark for both teams is a rather large piece of red or black twill, with sewn on twill letters and applique stars, and the twill is then sewn to the jersey front. Red or black ASG patch is sewn to the back of the neck, and each player's team secondary logo is sewn to the left sleeve. Oddly, the official 2015 All-Star patch is not sewn on these jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 All-Star BP

These jerseys are Cool Base, not Flex Base in construction.

The San Diego Padres host the 2016 contest, and choose their memorable 1970s style sheet and palate of colors for the game's warmup jerseys. American league jerseys are "Padre Gold" with "Padre Brown" sleeves and side panels. National League jerseys are exactly the opposite in construction. The 2016 All-Star patch is on the right sleeve, and each player's home team logo is on the left sleeve, in combinations of yellow, brown and red/orange twill.

© GameWornGuides.com

2016 Jersey Hem Signatures/Stars as Worn in the All-Star Game

For 2016 only, each All-Star's jersey for the game not only had stars applied to the back of the collar, as seen on the previous page, but also had the player's own signature applied to the bottom right hem of the jersey in gold, along with gold stars, one for each of his All-Star Game appearances. These can be seen in the pregame photo at far left, while the images at left shows the signature and stars for 10-time All-Star David Ortiz. Aside from the few who were in the park for pregame workouts, this detail was invisible to all viewers as soon as the players tucked their jerseys in for the game. The "feature" only lasted one season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 All-Star BP

The 2017 All-Star Game lands in Miami, and Miami's bright colors are on full display. Borrowed from the hosting Marlins, the AL wears teal Cool Base jerseys with black sleeves while the NL gets orange Cool Base jerseys with black sleeves. Both sides have team patches on the left sleeve and the 2017 All-Star Game patch on right, white names on back, and black/white back numbers in the Marlins' custom font. Front wordmarks are an elaborate combo of twill and embroidery, just like the Marlins' own jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Star Sleeve Patch as Worn in the All-Star Game

Starting in 2017, collar stars (and jersey-tail signatures and stars) give way to a CFX patch, shaped like a star, displaying the number of times a player has appeared in the All-Star game. The patch is black and gold in 2017, then changes to black and sliver for 2018-2019. During the game, it is worn on the left sleeve in 2017-2018, and the right sleeve in 2019.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 All-Star BP

Held in Washington, DC, the 2018 All-Star game again borrows the host team's colors and iconography for the All-Star BP jerseys, and DC's image, of course, focuses on its role as the U.S. capital. The AL wore blue, the NL red, and each team's jersey had the other color around the neck in a faux collar design, as well as in wide stripes up the side of the jersey. Both jerseys also had a center side stripe in white with silver stars. Both team's front logos incorporate printed twill with script that, according to The Washington Post, comes from an essay by baseball historian John Thorn ("Baseball is not a conventional industry. It belongs neither to the players nor management, but to all of us. It is our national pastime, our national symbol and our national treasure."). The "American" wordmark features the Washington Monument while the "National" League displays the dome of the U.S. Capitol. Both teams use white player names and gray/white back numbers in the Nationals' font, with team logos on left sleeve in red and white for the AL and blue and white for the NL. The right sleeve bears the CFX All-Star Game logo patch.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 All-Star BP

The 2019 All Star Game, held in Cleveland, again borrows the host team's color scheme – red for AL, navy for NL – here in a sleeveless Cool Base jersey. Both sides have their league affiliation on front in a guitar-shaped graphic (a nod to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame's presence in Cleveland), with the AL lettering blue/silver, and NL red/silver. Both sides have player names in light gray with numbers in medium gray/light gray Block. A CFX rubberized patch bearing an alternate version of the ASG logo is sewn on the back of the jersey collar, and each player's team's logo patch, reduced to blue/white for AL teams and red/white for NL teams is sewn on the right chest. Players wear gray shirts under the jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Tyler Skaggs Patch in All-Star Game

Soon after the death of Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, each All-Star wore a black “45” patch on the right chest of their game uniforms in Skaggs’ honor. His former teammates Mike Trout and Tommy La Stella also wore 45 as their uniform numbers for the game. The patches were adhesive, so several fell off during the game, and at least one player wore it on his cap instead.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 All-Star Workout Day

Post-pandemic, MLB changed things up for the All-Star week festivities as far as uniforms go. Rather than a dedicated BP jersey for Workout Day and practice, all participants wore their home uniforms for these events. The one special element was universal recognition for the recently deceased legend, Hank Aaron, in the form of all uniformed personnel wearing his uniform number 44. (Perhaps it is a preview of things to come if MLB ever declares an annual Hank Aaron day as it has for Jackie Robinson and Roberto Clemente.) MLB auctioned off the jerseys in support of the Hank Aaron Chasing the Dream Foundation, which Aaron started with his wife Billye in the hope of inspiring young people to develop their skills and pursue their passions.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 All-Star Game

In a disappointing break of longstanding tradition (which was suggested as far back as 2003 but scrapped), the “BP” jerseys moved from the Workout Day and Home Run Derby into the All-Star Game itself. For the 2021 game, MLB and Nike introduced completely new uniforms for the Midsummer Classic, featuring a two-color logo and one-color abbreviated wordmark to indicate a player’s team on front. Both jerseys also had a wide sleeve-end trim with a floral pattern on it, perhaps a holdover from when the game was originally intended to be in Atlanta. American flag patches adorned the left sleeves, in red and white for AL and blue and white for NL. (Blue Jays players also wore a Canadian flag patch on right chest under the Nike logo.) Both sets also carried the CFX All-Star Game patch on the right sleeve.

AL All-Stars wore a blue jersey with red team lettering vertically on front, red player name on back, and tan/red drop shadow numbers. NL had white jerseys with red team and player name lettering, with blue/red drop shadow player numbers. A row of stars under the back number indicated how many All-Star games that player had participated in. Fan response was decidedly negative.

Detail of floral sleeve-end pattern from the American League jersey.

© GameWornGuides.com

2021 All-Star Game

Shown here, all 30 2021 All-Star jerseys, compiled by Chris Creamer for his site sportslogos.net. Our thanks to Chris for letting us use these images.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022 All-Star Game

The 2022 All-Star Game game brings a hybrid approach to the tradition of players wearing their own uniforms and standardized uniforms per league. In what feels a lot like Players Weekend 2019 all over again, the All-Stars are outfitted in monochromatic versions of their team uniforms, dark charcoal for AL and white for NL. Front and back lettering on both is metallic gold/black. Names on back are in a rounded condensed font, while numbers are block. All team lettering on front is reduced to two colors, regardless of the original, and no front numbers are used even if the team usually has them. In what was a preview of the future Nike Vapor Premier Elite template of 2024, back numbers are perforated with tiny diamond-shaped holes, and sleeve patches are heavily silk-screened twill vs. CFX or embroidery. The All-Star Game patch adorns the right sleeve, while the star patch celebrating the number of All-Star appearances for each player returns on the left, after being absent since 2019.

Above right: Detail of perforated back numbers

These jerseys call to mind those worn by Vanderbilt University baseball, another Nike client.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022 All-Star Game

Shown here, all 30 2022 All-Star jerseys, compiled by Chris Creamer for his site sportslogos.net. Our thanks to Chris for letting us use these images.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 All-Star Game

Left: The ASG 23 text inside the collar. Right: Detail of perforated back numbers

The 2023 All-Star Game, held in Seattle, brings not only another new look to the Midsummer Classic, but also a look at new jersey template to come. Nike unveiled its Vapor Premiere Elite jerseys during the game, which were adopted league-wide the following season.

As for 2023, the jerseys borrowed from Seattle's color scheme, with the AL in teal and NL in Navy. According to MLB, the jerseys also honored "the region's natural beauty with a print that blends elements of the nearby Pacific Ocean, forests, topography and the movement of air. All lettering for both teams was white, with the Mariner's compass logo - here with an MLB logo in the center - replacing the final "A" of each team name. Player numbers appear on back and front (the back numbers were perforated), while the All-Star Game logo patch (complete with sponsor logo) resided on the left sleeve, and a matching-color version of each player's team logo was on the right.

Like many of Nike's recent releases (such as City Connect) the jersey contained details not visible when worn, but desirable at retail. "ASG 23" letter was heat pressed inside the back collar, and "The Future is Here" with the compass coordinates for Seattle were pressed just above the jock tag in the tail.

The pattern on the 2023 All-Star jerseys is reminiscent of the one used on Premier League team Liverpool's 2020-21 away jersey, also made by Nike, with "Vapor" branding.

© GameWornGuides.com

2024 All-Star Game

Above Left and Center: The tag sewn in to the bottom of the placket

Above Right: The printed, sewn, and perforated back numbers

The 2024 All-Star Game, held in Texas, brings a second Vapor Premiere Elite (VPE) jerseys to the game, in some very interesting color combinations.

Where these jerseys usually nod to the host team's own branding, the 2024 jerseys were completely unrelated. They AL features a tan body with bright orange sleeves and bright blue sleeve trim. The NL checks in with a black jersey, bright blue sleeves, and bright orange sleeve trim. Though the jerseys share some colors, the choices seem random and, frankly, garish. Perforated back numbers also feature an intricate stitching and printing pattern to imply a drop shadow. The All-Star Game patch (complete with sponsor logo) resides on the right sleeve, and a matching-color version of each player's team logo is on the left.

Like many of Nike's recent releases, the jersey contains details not visible when worn, but desirable at retail. A small "ASG" tag is sewn into the bottom of the placket, and a screened "ASG 2024, Arlington, TX" patch is sewn above the jock tag in colors matching the jersey.

These jerseys seem more like an in-your-face example of what Nike and Fanatics could do with baseball jerseys rather than what they should do. The backlash from fans and media was equally loud and brazen, and MLB announced that players would return to wearing their own teams' uniforms in the 2025 game.

© GameWornGuides.com

2025 All-Star Game BP

Note these are renderings of retail jerseys, game-used jerseys vary.

Top: The heat-pressed graphic above the jock tag (left) and a detail of back numbers (right).

Bottom: Detail images of the patterns in the AL and NL lettering,

The 2025 All-Star Game, held in Atlanta, brings back the tradition of players wearing their own teams' uniforms in the game. Consequently, MLB also returns to using the game's BP jerseys as its template for annual creativity.

The BP jerseys nod to Atlanta baseball history, taking most of their cues from the team's classic 1970s uniforms, a reference to Hank Aaron when he eclipsed Ruth's career home run total.

The AL features a navy body with red/royal/red sleeve trim and red trim around the collar and placket. "AL" is on front in lower-case cursive in patterned white/royal 3D drop shadow/red. Front number is yellow/royal, back number is white (with a printed gray stripe)/royal/red with a yellow player name. The NL has a royal body with red/navy/red sleeve trim and red trim around the collar and placket. "NL" is on front in lower-case cursive in patterned white/navy 3D drop shadow/red. Front number is yellow/navy, back number is white (with a printed gray stripe)/navy/red with a yellow player name. Oddly, the "AL" and "NL" marks intentionally overlap the placket trim.

The 2025 All-Star Game patch (with sponsor logo) appears on one sleeve and a recolored version of each player's team logo is on the other. Patch placement varies based on player handedness.

Like many of Nike's recent releases, the jersey contains heat-pressed graphics above the jock tag that are not visible when worn on-field, but desirable at retail.

Though they were available at retail with players' own jersey numbers, these were only worn on-field during the home run derby, when all AL players wore "3" to honor Ruth, and all NL players wore "44" for Aaron.

The on-field jerseys are made on Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, and had perforated front and back numbers, despite this feature being eliminated from other VPE jerseys in 2025.

Though made with players' own numbers at retail, and for presentation ceremonies at each ballpark (left), all AL players wore "3" for Babe Ruth, and all NL players wore "44" for Hank Aaron during the Home Run Derby, the only time these jerseys were used.

© GameWornGuides.com

All-Star Oddballs: 1999 NL Prototypes

MLB went “futuristic” with the 1999 All-Star BP jerseys, but these prototypes show that a more traditional approach was also in play, and even when the scales tipped to vertical, metallic lettering, there was still more tinkering to be done.

At left is a prototype of a 1999 NL jersey, featuring a more traditional horizontal wordmark in white/blue/gray that shares its font and star/bunting treatment with the game’s logo and other collateral from the year. The jersey itself has sleeves - which the chosen jerseys did not - and carries a gray-border version of the 1999 All-Star Patch on the left sleeve. The jersey is blank on the back, giving us no indication of what was planned for player names and numbers. It is likely that a team logo patch would have gone on the right sleeve.

At right is another prototype, though this one trends much closer to the chosen design for the year. Here we see the familiar distinctive vertical lettering style in metallic silver twill with the same theme as the “Turn Ahead The Clock” jerseys of the same year. What differs from the final version is the wide, red outline around the silver front lettering, that presents more as a large patch than individual letters (though the chosen design is also one piece of red twill, it is cut much more closely to the outline of the lettering. This jersey also has the same flocked alternate All-Star Game logo on the right chest that was used on the final version of this design.

Both jerseys also feature the older-style “Diamond Collection” logo on the jock tags, rather than the later “Authentic Collection” branding that was used on the actual jersey in 1999, suggesting an earlier manufacturing date, as would be expected of prototypes.

Note the much wider red outline on the prototype version of the front lettering (top) than that used in the actual jersey (bottom).

That, and the use of the earlier “Diamond Collection” tag on this example, suggest this was a close-to-final iteration of the jersey that was ultimately used in 1999.

© GameWornGuides.com

All-Star Oddballs: 2008 AL Sample-Prototype

Shown here is a sample American League All-Star jersey for the 2008 game, which was held at Yankee Stadium. Note the sample tagging that reads “TASGAML08” that attests to this s a prototype.

Overall, it appears that the design was close to final by the time the sample was made, as it appears identical to the actual version at right, save for the lack of a heat-pressed jock tag on the prototype.

2008

© GameWornGuides.com

All-Star Oddballs: 2017 Prototypes

From the looks of these prototypes for the 2017 All-Star Game BP jerseys, everyone might have been forced to wear black to play baseball in Miami in July. Miami's retractable-roof ballpark is air conditioned...but still. These samples are basically color-inverted versions of what actually made the field in 2017, with black bodies instead of black sleeves, and bright orange and teal for sleeves and side panels, where the actual jerseys limited the black just to sleeves. The front lettering and player names remained the same, however, the black/white back numbers of the final jerseys differ from the orange/white versions here. Even though these are just used for workouts, BP, and the home run derby, the color similarity between the two teams would have been confusing.

Note that the heat-pressed tags, located inside the placket on both, read "HRD-NAT-IN-F-1-2017" for the AL jersey and "HRD-NAT-CU-F-1-2017" for the NL. The "HRD" is likely "Home Run Derby" which takes place on All-Star Workout Day when these jerseys were intended to be worn. The "NAT" is curious, suggesting National League, despite also appearing on the AL jersey. The "IN" and "CU" stand for Indians and Cubs, the teams the players chosen for the samples represent, and the F-1 likely indicates the version of this particular style among other prototypes. The use of these two players is also interesting - it is unclear why they were chosen rather than "Player 17" or some other generic back lettering. Both were All-Stars that year, but it is likely the jerseys were made up well in advance of the teams being selected.

A friendly reminder of the jerseys as worn on the field, also available earlier in this chapter.

© GameWornGuides.com

All-Star Oddballs: 2020 NL Prototype

In the 2020 edition, we showed the screen caps at left from “MLB The Show 20” video game, which were confirmed to have been the intended designs by a trusted source of Paul Lukas, then-author of the Uni-Watch blog. Since then, we have come across a sample of one of these jerseys, as well as two other samples (on the next page) that show that the rescheduled game in 2023 was originally intended to follow this design before it veered in a different direction.

The top jersey, intended for the 2020 game, is similar to the video game still, though the wordmark differs slightly and there is no front number. This one is on the Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, including the set-in neck trim and perforated numbers, three years before it actually debuted. Oddly, the player name is on a nameplate, though nameplates had all but disappeared by 2020. Note the unusual sample wash tag inside the jersey, once we have not seen on other MLB jerseys.

It is unclear how close these came to production given the cancellation of the 2020 All-Star Game after the start of the season was delayed during the COVID lockdown starting in March. Given the different wordmark and lack of front numbers in the sample vs. the video game still (which are often accurate) it is possible changes were made after this sample stage.

The next page shows two more samples that indicate the intent to reuse this style for 2023, an idea that was ultimately scrapped.

© GameWornGuides.com

All-Star Oddballs: 2023 NL Prototypes

These two different samples were made for the 2023 game in Los Angeles, which had been rescheduled after the 2020 game in LA was canceled. They show that the overall design displayed on the previous page was at least in serious consideration, with modifications, once again for the 2023 contest.

Both samples shown here share the same design, but differ slightly from the 2020 sample on the previous page, adding a blue front number and removing the nameplate on back. Also VPE, these have navy collar trim and an NL patch on the right sleeve, which the 2020 prototype lacks.

On the top example, note the familiar heat-pressed tag that reads “DJ6530 SET-IN WEAR TEST QPP” There is also a hand-written notation correcting the style of sleeves on the jersey as raglan, which is correct for this jersey. It is likely that QPP means “Quality, Process, and Procedures” which is a stage of quality control to ensure that a sample will meet expectation of look, feel, and durability. This could be where the “WEAR TEST” designation comes in.

The bottom jersey indicates it is also a wear test from the “WT” designation on the tag, and even goes so far as to call this the “2020” jersey, even though the tag and jersey both indicate that “23” - referring to the year of the game - is to be used as player number on back.

Though we are not completely sure, we would surmise that the top sample is a later version than the bottom, given that it was assigned a style code of DJ6350, something the bottom version lacks, which may indicate it was further along in the design process.

Regardless, when the 2023 NL All-Stars took the field in LA, this style jersey was nowhere to be found, and has become just a footnote in All-Star history.

© GameWornGuides.com

All-Star Oddballs: Errors

Thanks to Steve Sale for this contribution

Where we are reminded there is no "I" in team… nor apparently in "American" (1998) or "Piniella" (2001) either.

For your inspection, a 1999 "Nntional" League jersey

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 42

Stitchers' Stories

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Researching this book through its many editions has brought me into contact with dozens of fascinating people. The most interesting of all, are the people who were there at the start: those who have played an active role in helping to create these team uniforms, bringing them from the drawing board to the cloth. I have found these people as a group to be creative, gracious, humble and very giving of their time.

I reached out to some of these behind-the-scenes friends and asked if they would like to contribute some of their memories to share with my readers. Their enthusiastic responses fill the next several pages. Here you will read some memories of:

- Steve Sale, who served as the tailor for the Oakland Athletics for fifteen seasons.
- Ross Yoshida, the long-time Director of Graphic Design for the Los Angeles Dodgers.
- Todd Radom, an extraordinary graphic designer whose work you have seen everywhere, whether you realize it or not.
- Patsy Elmer, my long-time collaborator and friend, who serves as the professional stitcher for so many pro teams, including being a part of the birth of the Arizona Diamondbacks.
- Jim Haught, who worked for years behind the scenes in Cincinnati as stitcher for the Reds.
- Mark Huesman, who shares his stories as a stitcher for the Baltimore Orioles.
- Joe Hilseberg, who shares his insight from his time working as a stitcher in the Baltimore area, also for the Orioles.

I hope you enjoy this look behind the scenes by the people who have helped make our hobby possible.

Steve Sale

Stitcher for the Oakland Athletics, 1988-2003

In 1976, I had just graduated from high school, and the A's held an open tryout for walk-ons and free agents at the Oakland Coliseum. I attended the tryout, knowing I had NO chance of being signed, but I thought this was a way of experiencing first hand what it was like to be on the same field that my favorite players played on. WOW! Just to be on that field was an experience. I then thought that maybe I could get a job working on the grounds crew. I just really wanted to get a job being part of my favorite baseball team, and I wasn't going to let ANYTHING stop me. In 1988 I pursued an opportunity that would fulfill a lifelong dream.

Ever since I was a teenager, I have always been fascinated with baseball jerseys. The style, lettering, and what made them cool to wear. Knowing I couldn't afford the real thing, I would design replicas as close to the real thing as possible. My attention to detail was so evident that I would constantly hear comments from people such as "where did you get that 'real' jersey" because my lettering looked so professional. Cardboard from old file folders and the drugstore copy machine became very good friends when I designed my patterns. Over the years, I noticed lettering variations among the players on same teams and tried to make sense of the rhyme and reason for the lettering not looking "uniform." In the early 1980's, there was a sporting goods store near where I lived that lettered the A's uniforms, and I was one of the store's regular customers. I was like a kid in a candy store looking at the various actual jerseys that were lettered for the players. I scrutinized the jersey lettering, comparing the thickness of the letters used for both long and short names, tackle-twill, etc.

Don Baylor with the incorrect jersey that helped Steve Sale get his job with the A's.

Just after the 1988 season started, the manager of that sporting goods store decided not to do the lettering anymore, and that based on my knowledge of lettering and being an A's fan, he told me I should contact the A's clubhouse manager, Steve Vucinich, and apply for the job. Finally, here was the opportunity to purse my dream—to work for the Oakland A's—and I didn't want to miss out on this opportunity. I went to the Coliseum without an appointment in the hope of meeting "Vuc." While looking for Vuc, I couldn't believe I was in the same locker room as the famous "Swinging A's" of the 1970's. To me, where I was standing was hallowed ground. Shortly thereafter, I found Vuc and introduced myself. I explained that I knew the person who was currently lettering their jerseys, and since he was stepping away, he felt I was qualified to replace him. Vuc, not knowing anything about me, proceeded to show me a couple of jerseys while explaining to me the correct color green twill, and the lettering/numbering styles the team was using. Vuc showed me two jerseys, one which Vuc didn't know was lettered incorrectly. I didn't want to appear as a know-it-all, so I waited until Vuc was finished explaining what he needed. The incorrectly lettered jersey was a Don Baylor #12. I told

© GameWornGuides.com

Vuc the Baylor jersey was incorrectly lettered, and I showed him the comparison between the Baylor and a correctly lettered jersey. I pointed out that whoever lettered the Baylor had used full block (Varsity) letters for the name, and the nameplate was made of twill instead of the jersey knit. When Vuc compared the two, he said, "Well I'll be damned, I've never noticed that. You've got the job." That was the start of my fifteen seasons as the team stitcher, the fulfillment of achieving my dream of working for the Oakland A's.

My time spent with the A's was rewarding, and at times could be stressful with special requests, player moves, etc. However, I wouldn't have traded those seasons for ANYTHING. I was living my dream, and I knew how lucky I was. I still recall that the first jersey I lettered was a 1988 Jim Corsi #41. In addition to taking care of the A's lettering needs, I was responsible for the visiting clubs that required immediate attention due to roster moves or alterations. In the beginning, I didn't know how to use a sewing machine, so I farmed out the sewing. After only a few weeks of farming out, my wife bought me a sewing machine, and with her help, I taught myself how to sew. Now ALL the money was staying in my pocket.

Some of the most stressful periods were one week before Opening Day when rosters were finalized, and September 1 when rosters expanded. My role was very similar to that of a doctor being on call. You never knew when you would be called, but you needed to be ready and available. In fact, something my wife doesn't let me forget is when we were planning our wedding date, I told her we had to make it on a day when the A's were on a road trip in case I was needed. She wasn't thrilled, but I redeemed myself when we returned from our honeymoon early to attend a Neil Diamond concert with near floor level seats. My wife, who has always been an A's fan, was more excited to see former A's players Sal Bando, Ray Fosse, and others sitting in the row behind us.

Whenever people find out about my stitching career, the two most common comments have been "you had a real cool job," and "I bet you have some great memories and stories." Yes to both. Some of the most memorable experiences I had were when superstars Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire were traded away and Rickey Henderson came back home (again). In my position, I was sworn to secrecy involving trades. It was fun knowing about trades before the press did. Whenever team personnel (including announcers) saw me in the clubhouse, they knew something was going on. I would get asked, "Hey Steve, who are we getting?" I couldn't say anything, so I just smiled.

Prior to the 1989 World Series against the Giants, I had to sew on the World Series patches and black armbands on the jersey sleeves. The armband was to honor MLB Commissioner Bart Giamatti, who passed away unexpectedly just prior to the World Series. When I brought the jerseys back to the clubhouse after getting them ready for Game 1, Dave "Hendu" Henderson acted like a little kid on Christmas morning. Hendu stopped me as I entered the clubhouse and begged me to let him see his jersey before anyone else saw theirs. Hendu searched the rack, found his jersey, grabbed it, and proceeded to walk through the clubhouse showing the other players. Hendu's smile was from ear to ear. He was one of the classiest people you would ever meet.

Dave Henderson (42) was thrilled to wear his 1989 World Series jersey and begged Sale to see it as soon as he got to the clubhouse.

© GameWornGuides.com

Other notable memories were the times when celebrities were appearing at the arena next door to the stadium and I would get requests to make jerseys for them. The most famous celebrity request I received was to make a jersey to be presented to President George H.W. Bush when the A's went to the White House after winning the 1989 World Series.

A's manager Tony LaRussa presents President George Bush with a jersey lettered by Steve Sale.

When visiting ballclubs came into town, I was responsible for lettering their jerseys due to roster moves or emergencies. One such emergency involved the Seattle Mariners when Goose Gossage's road jersey was left behind in Seattle. I would bring my sewing machine with me for such emergencies, so I could help if a visiting club had a problem like this one . Since Gossage was a relief pitcher who might have been called into the game at any moment, I had to work fast. From time to time, Gossage would come in and check on my progress while reassuring me not to stress and asking me if he could get me a water. Talk about a role reversal. Another class act, Goose was. His jersey was finished in time.

Fans who have seen "Moneyball" will recall that in the movie, A's general manager Billy Beane was actively trying to acquire pitcher Ricardo Rincon from the Cleveland Indians. When the Indians came to Oakland, I was in the A's clubhouse gathering jerseys to take home to work on. As I was getting ready to leave, things got crazy. Vuc had told me to stick around because the A's were possibly making a roster move. Sure enough, after the game had started, Rincon was dealt to the A's. I was given a blank jersey to make for Rincon and I was told I could sew it at home, as long as I had it back the next day before the day game. Meanwhile, Rincon was told he could go back to his hotel as he would not be needed that night. When Billy Beane came into the clubhouse, he asked where Rincon was. When he heard Rincon was sent back to the hotel, he was furious. He wanted someone to call Rincon and tell him to return to the ballpark immediately in case he was needed to pitch. This meant I had to start working on making Rincon's jersey right away. I needed a place to set up my sewing machine, and the only room available was A's manager Art Howe's office. Then Beane decided to watch the game on the in-house monitor next to me in Howe's office! Talk about stress! As I'm sewing like crazy, Beane strikes up a conversation with me, asking how things were, etc. From time to time, Vuc would send in his clubhouse guys to check on my progress. To make matters worse, Howe called the clubhouse to see if Rincon was going to be in uniform soon. Of course, it depended on how fast I could finish sewing Rincon's jersey. I finished Rincon's jersey midway through the game, and he wasn't needed that night to pitch that night after all. But that was too close of a call.

The 1988-2003 seasons were very special and memorable for a lifelong A's fan who lived the dream of working for his favorite team. Not many people can say that. Thanks to Steve Vucinich for giving me that chance back in 1988.

An A's fan since they moved to Oakland in 1968, Steve Sale was the stitcher for the Oakland A's from 1988 to 2003.

© GameWornGuides.com

Ross Yoshida

Director of Graphic Design, Los Angeles Dodgers

Ross Yoshida, Director of Graphic Design for the Los Angeles Dodgers, shares a few behind-the-scenes stories about his work on the iconic Dodgers uniforms.

Jersey Lettering

I always loved that the Dodgers had our own "exclusive" fabric that we used for our blue lettering — the subtly textured stretch polyester known as "Dodger Twill", unique within the uniform industry. In 1999, that (amongst other things, which I'll get to later), changed. For some reason, the Dodgers went away from one of the cool little details that had made our uniforms special for over twenty years, and joined every other team in using plain old tackle twill lettering.

Detail of Dodger Twill (top) vs. Tackle Twill (bottom).

When I took my position in 2001, I sought to change that. Either go back to the "Dodger Twill" or try something new. Personally, I didn't like how the twill had a reflective sheen under both stadium light and natural light. When told Dodger Twill was being phased out, I asked to try a textured "glacier twill" (similar to what the Mets once used), a chain stitch and even a felt material similar to what was used on old flannel baseball jerseys.

Unfortunately, none of those ideas really panned out. Glacier Twill didn't come in the Dodgers' exact shade, chain-stitching was too costly (and had no precedent in Dodger history) and felt was simply too heavy for modern jerseys.

I still don't like the sheen of tackle twill…. Under Armour takes over in 2020… stay tuned.

Jersey Patches

In 2007, while a freelancer, I was asked to design the Dodgers' "50th Anniversary in Los Angeles" logo, which would become the sleeve patch in 2008. Since then, I've designed two other jersey patches… the 2010 "55 Since '55" patch (commemorating the 55th anniversary of the Dodgers' first championship) and the 50th Anniversary of Dodger Stadium patch. The design of

Three Dodgers patches designed by Ross Yoshida

© GameWornGuides.com

the 2008 patch didn't turn out exactly how I would've liked, but it was the first patch design of mine to appear on the field of play so it'll always be my 'baby.' The person I was working with insisted on palm trees being a part of the design… as a native Angeleno, I guess I take palm trees for granted — but they ended up being a nice addition.

Alternate Gray Uniform

I'm of the personal belief that having two road gray jerseys is a bit of overkill, but before the 2014 season, a Dodger executive came to me in a panic. He was very concerned that our road uniforms didn't say 'Dodgers', and we were going to be on the world stage, opening in Sydney, Australia against the Arizona Diamondbacks as the designated road team. I argued that it'd be fine—even without 'Dodgers' on the jersey, the blue script and interlocking LA on the jerseys sleeves, caps and helmets would suffice to brand the team. Unconvinced, he had me come up with a series of mockups of potential alternate gray jerseys with "Dodgers" across the chest (including one that was basically a throwback to our road jersey from 1977-1998) and others various trim options. In the end, what was chosen was basically a gray version of the Dodgers' home white jerseys.

But that's not the end of the story… it was assumed the new, trimless gray road jerseys would just pair with the existing road gray pants with the blue soutache down the legs (remember, the Dodgers' "Los Angeles" road jerseys have matching blue trim on the sleeves!). No way. The new alternates had to be matched with their own set of pants — sans blue trim. Is this a bit of overkill to order an entire new set of gray pants, with the only difference being an absence of what amounts to to 1/8" wide blue stripes? Maybe… but, when it comes to the on-field look of a historical club, either do it right or don't do it all.

Fixing the Script

One thing I've always viewed as sacred, even as a kid, is the classic "Dodgers" jersey script. As I got older, I came to know that my team had been wearing virtually the same uniform design since 1939. Seeing other teams in my baseball card collection change their look quite often, that fact struck me as pretty cool.

My entire life, the "Dodgers" jersey script had remained exactly the same—until 1999 when the script I was familiar with inexplicably changed. I'm sure that 99.999% of fans didn't notice anything had changed, but to this hyper-aware graphic designer, the thinning of the script, with increased gaps between letters, elongated underflourish and steeper angle, was akin to blasphemy. It literally bothered me every time I'd watch a Dodger home game on TV. Fast-forward to 2002… guess who's now the Dodgers' graphic designer? Although too late to change anything for the 2002 season, I was determined to right a wrong and restore the sacred Dodgers script to past glory. With the help of my friend in merchandise apparel, I sent a memo to Majestic, who had just become our new uniform supplier. The memo can be seen in this book… and you can see how it was made clear that Majestic was to discard any old artwork and move forward only with artwork that was provided. Unfortunately, some things tend to die a slow death and there are unfortunate examples of the 'bad' script creeping into retail merchandise. However, the on-field version of the script was as pristine as could be in 2013, and has stayed that way ever since. (I also chose to modify the 'Los Angeles' script at this time to make it more consistent and cohesive with our home 'Dodgers' script — but that's not as interesting of a story.)

© GameWornGuides.com

In 2002, Yoshida and the Dodgers sent these updated script guides to their apparel suppliers, giving them very specific direction to correct the team's logo script on all jerseys.

The Future?

I hope I've provided some insight into some of the things that have gone on behind the scenes at Chavez Ravine — and least from a uniform standpoint. There are other things I have tried to do, including removing the LA patch from the sleeve (a battle I've stopped fighting but may revisit if/when the time is right), creating a custom number font and re-introducing belt tunnel trim on the road pants, but those have all been shot down from above.

Under Armour takes over in 2020, and, if I'm still in my position with the Dodgers, I'd like to see what they can bring to the table. I do know they manufacture a gray fabric that is sublimated to look like gray wool flannel… hmmmmm..

As of 2025, Ross Yoshida is in his 20th season as Director of Graphic Design for the Los Angeles Dodgers. He started with the Dodgers in 2001, worked elsewhere between 2005-2008, and returned in 2009 ("Just when I thought I was out, they pulled me back in!" he says).

© GameWornGuides.com

Todd Radom

Professional Graphic Designer

I've had the good fortune to have enjoyed a lengthy career as a sports designer. I graduated from New York's School of Visual Arts in 1986 (the year of the New York Mets' most recent World Series win, but that's a whole different story). The process of creating art in those days was a truly tactile, handmade experience, wholly different than that of today. It was both time-consuming and expensive, and it required a specific skill set that isn't required in the contemporary digital age.

Deft and careful handling of sharp objects, such as X-Acto knives was in play every single day, and the aroma of rubber cement and acetone filled the air. Daily exposure to toxins has diminished, but the work continues for me all these years later.

My first professional sports identity assignment was for the Knoxville Smokies, the Toronto Blue Jays' AA Southern League affiliate. This took place in 1992, right at the dawn of design's digital age. At that time I was making a solid living doing hand-lettering, logo design, and illustration for a range of advertising and publishing clients. Creating bespoke artwork—literally by hand—for clients such as American Express, AT&T, and Penguin Books was both lucrative and interesting. My first investment in computerized tools came later that year. A turbo-charged Mac Quadra 700, early versions of Adobe Illustrator and Photoshop and Quark Xpress, a flatbed scanner and a couple of other small items cost something like $15,000 then, the rough equivalent of $26,000 today—but I digress.

The Smokies identity was a purely artisanal affair. I drew sketches on tracing paper with markers, affixed them to more rigid paper, and presented them to the client. I am a confirmed packrat, as such, I still have much of the original artwork from that project.

Refinements were made and faxed for approval(hey, it might have been primitive but we DID have faxes).

When the project was approved, I prepared final, camera-ready artwork. I owned a Photostat machine, an enormous contraption that was essentially a huge camera with an integrated darkroom attached in the back. We'd put a piece of original art

The evolution of the Knoxville Smokies logo by Todd Radom

© GameWornGuides.com

or typography face-up on a piece of glass, zoom in or out, and project the image onto a piece of photo paper. The paper was then exposed to a chemical bath, dried, then rolled out. All in black and white.

The art for each color was assembled and pasted onto separate layers of acetate, which were manually aligned and composed, sandwiched together, and marked up. Uniform lettering was rendered at full width, 17-18 inches wide.

Looking at these images a quarter century later, I cannot help but feel kind of nostalgic. All of this is, of course, now created and delivered digitally. The process is less hands-on than it used to be, but it's also far more efficient and far less toxic.

Todd Radom is an independent graphic designer specializing in branding for professional sports franchises and events. Todd's work includes the official logos for Super Bowl XXXVIII and the 2009 NBA All Star Game, as well as the graphic identity for Major League Baseball's Washington Nationals and Los Angeles Angels. Among the leading designers in the professional sports industry, his two decades of work with the NFL, NBA, and Major League Baseball have resulted in some of the most familiar icons of our popular culture.

Right: A selection of Todd Radom's logos for Major League Baseball. (Top) Anaheim Angels, Washington Nationals (Middle) Fenway Park 90th Anniversary, Milwaukee Brewers (Bottom) World Baseball Classic, Yankee Stadium Inaugural Season

© GameWornGuides.com

Patsy Elmer: Owner, Big Time Jerseys
Attending at the Birth of the Arizona Diamondbacks

The Diamondbacks Expansion Draft Party

It was November 18, 1997 and I was one of four ladies behind the stage during the Arizona Diamondbacks expansion draft party held at the Civic Plaza in downtown Phoenix. The draft was under a huge white tent and was shown on live TV. We had hauled in our equipment in the back of a truck to set up our own makeshift sewing area with an industrial sewing machine, heat press, tables, chairs, extension cords, a box full of letters and a rolling rack of 35 brand new Diamondbacks jerseys. To help speed up the process, we had previously sewn the backs of each jersey with the numbers #1 through #35.

One of the draft officials would come backstage and hand me a piece of paper with the name and draft number of the next draftee. It was written to make sure we had the correct spelling and so no one else could hear the name given. We had five to seven minutes to sew the name on the jersey with the number that referenced his draft round. Once we finished the jersey, I gave the official the thumbs up and he would let the announcer know by nodding his head. Once the name was officially announced, the jersey was brought to the stage to show the audience and everyone applauded in approval. Each jersey was individually hoisted to hang from the rafters until all 35 of them were done and hanging for all to see.

During the event, we caught the attention of many people who were walking by and of course they would stop to ask questions and see if they could possibly get a glimpse of the names we were sewing on the jerseys before they were announced. As I talked with them, I strategically positioned myself in front of the sewing machine so they couldn't see the draftee name that was getting sewn on the jersey by our seamstress.

I was so honored to be a part of Diamondbacks history in this way. It was a very exciting experience and one that I will always hold close to my heart.

After this event was over, the Diamondbacks decided to reduce the size of their player name-on-back letters from 3.75" to 3" and their back numbers from 8" to 7.5". This meant that all the hundreds of letters that we had made for our inventory were now obsolete and could not be used on game jerseys. We had spent so many, many hours hand tracing, hand cutting, heat pressing and sewing more than 2,500 two-color letters that would never be used.

"Bruce"

We have a large statue by the name of Bruce in downtown Phoenix. Normally he is completely naked. Every time I would pass by him, In my mind's eye I could see him wearing a giant Phoenix Suns uniform,and I imagined myself making this uniform for him. In 2010, the Suns were in the Western Conference Finals. I had just finished a very important rush order for a lady in the Suns organization and she was so grateful that she said if ever there was anything she could do for me, just to let her know. I thought that this was my golden opportunity. I asked her if I could make a Suns uniform for the naked statue on Washington and Central. She didn't know who to ask but said she would find out for me. Later that day, she called me with the name of the property manager that oversees the statue. I called him and told him of my desire to dress the statue in his own Suns uniform. He granted me permission on the spot and that was my first of several Arizona team uniforms that I have had the opportunity to make for Bruce. He and I have now become good friends.

© GameWornGuides.com

The following year, 2011, was the 10-year anniversary of the Diamondbacks' World Series title. I was fortunate again to be granted permission to make Bruce his own Arizona Diamondbacks uniform identical to the one worn by the team in 2001 when they won the World Series. Just to give you an idea of the size of this statue, he is 9' tall with a chest of 65", his waist is 55" and his inseam is 46". There is only one human being that I have ever sewn for whose measurements come anywhere close to these measurements and that is the one and only Shaquille O'Neal.

The uniform took six yards of fabric and took me approximately four days to draft the patterns, cut and sew the uniform and included two fittings on the statue. The name/# on the back was World Champions #01 with the American flag above the name. The letters were 4" and the back numbers were 9" tall. All the lettering cut files were generously and authentically provided to me by my good friend Bill Henderson. Because there had been several attempts made by thieves to steal the Suns uniform, I sewed loops inside the waistband of the pants and to the hemline of the jersey so I could run a cable around his waist and connect to the hemline of the jersey and locked the uniform to the statue. The building offered 24-hour surveillance for security, but attempts were still made to steal the D-Backs uniform without success.

A couple of colleagues of mine in the business of making mascots and props offered to make his cleats and mitt. I sent them photos of his feet with a tape measure next to them so they could have his measurements because they couldn't physically be there to measure his feet. I have since dressed Bruce in his own AZ Coyotes, Phoenix Mercury and Super Bowl XLIX uniforms.

Patsy Elmer has been sewing names and numbers on jerseys for Arizona professional sports teams for more than 20 years. She started at another company and launched her own business, Big Time Jerseys, in 2008. She now works with five employees for such clients as the Phoenix Suns, the Arizona Coyotes, and the Arizona Cardinals.

© GameWornGuides.com

Q&A with Jim Haught

My Experience as a Stitcher, Koch Sporting Goods, Cincinnati Ohio

Q: What was your role at Koch's?
At first, my job was primarily to fill team orders for baseball, basketball and bowling (big business in Cincinnati), as well as inventory control. But before long, I became the "pro jersey guy" because I had ordered jerseys from Koch's for several years before I worked there. This work involved sewing jerseys for the Reds or Bengals, or visiting teams, might need during their seasons, as well as pro jerseys for retail customers.

Q: At Spring Training, how did the team order the new season's uniforms?
The Reds would send over a bunch of odds-and-ends of uniforms from the previous season, usually to be re-lettered/renumbered for Spring Training use. New uniforms were not used until Opening Day, and came directly to the team from the manufacturers (for many years it was Rawlings home jerseys, Wilson away, with one year of Goodman home). There was a lot of mix-and-match with sizes and years of jerseys, as they scrambled to get enough jerseys for non-roster people, rookies, etc.

Q: What was reused from last year at the start of the new season?
As far as I know, everything was new on Opening Day: two home and two road jerseys for each player. The only exceptions might be a last-minute roster move or trade, and we made those up on the morning of Opening Day.

Q: How much time did you get, and what problems did you have with the new season orders?
Opening Day was like a fire drill, because it was a day game and there would always be a few roster moves or number changes—that sort of thing. We tried to anticipate what might happen, but there were still surprises.

When the Reds went to Goodman home uniforms in 1985 (and switched from Wilson to Rawlings for road jerseys), they also switched the number font and went to two-color letters and numbers on the home jerseys. So we had to have them send us enough lettered jerseys to make a full set of patterns hand-copying the existing nimbers, in addition sending is the blank jerseys for the new guys. And all of this had to be done manually, in time for the jerseys to be worn a couple of hours later!

A 1984 Reds jersey (left) and a 1985 jersey (right) for comparison. Note the change in font and the addition of a very subtle layer of white outline in 1985.

© GameWornGuides.com

Q: How did you handle patterns and the twill cutting?
We made the letter and number patterns by laying a piece of onion-skin paper over the jersey and doing a "rubbing" of it with a tailor's crayon. The thread stuck up a little bit and left a mark when rubbed, and those outlines were punched with a motorized stylus with an oscillating needle in it.

The pattern was then laid atop the tackle twill and rubbed with a powder that left little dots that were used as cutting lines (the powder disappeared when the numbers were heat-pressed). The letters/numbers were then cut with scissors. I later started using an X-Acto knife, which was faster for me, because I had built models all my life. It was also easier to cut out the centers of script letters, etc.

Q: What typical errors happened?
I'm happy to say that I never made any real "errors" like spelling a name wrong or getting a number wrong. I would check everything about 20 times to make sure of that.

We did have a "situation," though, when Buddy Bell was traded to the Reds. Max Venable gave up his #25 to Buddy, so we had to do a number change on his jerseys in addition to getting Buddy's ready. Problem was, the Reds changed to 8" numbers that year, and Max is a short guy. When I put his new #9 in the standard location, the bottom of the 9 tucked into his pants! So we had to redo that.

A 1985 Dykstra road jersey.

A similar thing happened when I made up Lenny Dykstra's jerseys when he got called up to the Mets. This was the pre-"Nails" days, and he wore—if you can believe it—a Rawlings size 40 road jersey. That's really tiny, and tapered, and it was hard to get a nameplate and number high enough to avoid the same problem Venable had.

Q: What about mid-season things like sewing memorial armbands on the whole team's uniforms— how was this done?
I never had to deal with that on a large scale, though I'm sure it would all have been done manually, a jersey at a time, just as we did for individual or retail jersey orders.

There were smaller things, such as in the middle of one season when Dave Concepcion was named Reds team captain. That involved getting all of his jerseys, and sewing stock Stahl's plain-block-narrow letter Cs to the sleeve. This probably lasted until the next full set of jerseys (set 2 or Set 3 for that season) came from the factory.

Q: What are the pros and cons of using nameplates?
I sure wish the Reds had used nameplates, or at least two-color letters and numbers, on their home jerseys then. When we had to do a name/number change, it was horrible to try to remove the red adhesive residue left from the tackle twill. No matter how much dry-cleaning fluid we used, there was always a bit of pink residue left behind.

The letters were 4" high then, so a nameplate would have been huge, and hard to make "lay down" without wrinkling, especially after it had been washed a few times.

A 1983 Jeff Russell Rawlings Reds home jersey that had the lettering removed, leaving pink residue behind.

© GameWornGuides.com

Q: How were mid-season trades and callups handled?
This was one of the real perks of my job. I would get a call from equipment manager Bernie Stowe: "Hey, Jim, you coming to the game tonight?" (Koch's was only about a mile from Riverfront Stadium, and I parked there during the week.) He would leave me a ticket if I needed one, and after the game I would go by the clubhouse and he would give me a paper bag (!) full of jerseys. He would then tell me what they needed, and that I couldn't tell anyone about the trade that had been made. I would get the jerseys made up ASAP the next morning, and take them back to the stadium. If things were more time-critical during the day, he would bring the jerseys by the store and we would do them while he waited, or I would bring them to the game that night.

September callups were a matter of getting the names and numbers, and the Reds would round up whichever jerseys they had left—all sorts of different sizes and years. There was no computerized inventory or anything like how it's done now. You might see a rookie with jerseys that were two different sizes and three years apart.

Visiting teams would usually bring what they needed to the store, and we did them as super-rush jobs.

Q: What happened to uniforms at the end of the season?
A number of them were saved for spring training, some went to the minors and in later years, I believe there was some sort of bulk sale to collectors such as Dick Dobbins. So they went in several directions.

Q: Did the team order extras to sell at retail?
I never saw game jerseys in the Reds gift shop during those years, nor am I aware that they sold jerseys via mail-order. Koch's was the only place I knew where one could get "real thing" jerseys for Reds and other MLB teams then. I got my first ones in 1977, for $45 each. Not game-worn, but the next-best thing.

Q: Did you do vertical arch lettering? How was it done?
We did do it, but it all had to be done manually, at a drawing board. We kept folders for each team with data and photos —often from Sports Illustrated—in them. Those were the primary reference, and we would take rubbings of visiting teams' jerseys to have for reference to get size, placement, arch, etc. correct. But much of it was done by eyeball, and best judgment. There was no such thing as Illustrator or other programs to do this work so much better and faster. But I will say that the work we did at Koch's stands up well today – much better than many attempts I've seen through the years.

Q: What do you think when you look back on your work?
I really enjoyed doing this work, and I got a big kick out of seeing jerseys I made on national TV. It was exciting, and I made some great friends in the game as a result. But with the birth of our first son in late 1985, I needed to make more money, and that was not going to happen in that job; so I left at the end of that year and worked in screen-printing for the next few years. Much better pay, but I missed being "on the inside," even just a little bit.

From 1983-1985, Jim Haught worked at Koch Sporting Goods in downtown Cincinnati. Koch's was, and still is, a large full-service store. Koch's also served the Reds and Bengals for many years with training camp/Spring Training and in-season needs.

© GameWornGuides.com

Mark Huesman

Stitching in Baltimore for the Orioles

My interest in personalizing baseball jerseys started when I was 12, wearing a cheap replica of the Orioles orange v-neck jersey. I made numbers from whatever black and white fabrics my mom had in her surplus fabric bag and hand-stitched the whole job. I still have that jersey and treasure it as the start of this passion. A Home Economics class in 8th grade pushed me into using a sewing machine and I've been stitching my sports jersey numbers, names and logos ever since.

My first exposure to game-quality jerseys occurred at The Orioles Store at Baltimore's Harborplace where the actual Wilson pro-quality orange jerseys were sold for $50. It was pricey for an allowance-saving 15 year old in July 1981, but I bought one, then futilely searched fabric stores for real tackle twill. Satiny twill from Joann's was the closest, but it would wrinkle in the wash. Sports lettering places wouldn't sell swatches from their tackle twill rolls thinking I'd be stealing business from them. Finally, I got a part-time job at one of those businesses and at three others over the years to keep me supplied in tackle twill for my own projects. The place where I worked in the mid-'90s got the Orioles stitcher business and I've stayed there part-time ever since, keeping me involved with the uniforms of the Orioles and other Baltimore teams like the Ravens, AHL Bandits and indoor soccer Baltimore Spirit. I've pressed and stitched game jerseys, added and removed patches, prepared Fantasy Camp, Ball Girl, and First Pitch jerseys, and customized some jackets for Orioles manager Buck Showalter. I've even tailored some baseball jerseys from scratch for mascots like the Oriole Bird, a Michigan J. Frog, and a Chick Fil-A cow.

Over the last 45 years, I've amassed a nice collection of Orioles game-worn jerseys as well as game-quality throwbacks that I've "Frankensteined" from other sources. In every instance, I take great pains to make sure the logos, names and numbers are accurate for the era. Throwback jerseys that the Orioles have worn have not benefited from that same level of scrutiny. As Bill has stated many times, there are throwbacks created where little effort was made to get the details right. Is there some secret rule that they are contractually obligated to create jerseys that couldn't be passed off as authentic vintage?

An original 1979 Orioles jersey (left and the 2001 TBTC version (right) for comparison. Note the incorrect number fonts and NOB style on the TBTC.

The inaccuracies can be maddening. A memorably frustrating occurrence for me was the Orioles 2001 throwback to my beloved 1975 orange v-neck Wilson jerseys. Mitchell and Ness sent the full named-and-numbered set directly to the team. The Orioles sent one jersey to be prepared for a last minute roster acquisition (Kohlmeier #30, shown in the O's Special Jerseys section). Not getting to see any of the other jerseys from the set, I had to guess which number and name style was used, automatically assuming that my 1975 patterns would be wrong and needing to guess which manner of wrongness was used. I owned four of the real game worn jerseys from that era and had my accurate patterns with the "adorably tiny" 5-1/2" full block back numbers and 2-1/2" tall vertical arch names. I rolled my eyes, let out a sad sigh, and placed the current 7-1/2" plain block numbers on the back with a radially arched name. It turns out that I had correctly guessed the wrongness. The game was on TV the next night and it was disheartening to watch.

© GameWornGuides.com

The coupe de grace of throwback stories occurred in 2004 when the Orioles planned a "Turn Back the Clock" event to commemorate their 50th anniversary by wearing uniforms from their first season of 1954. Apparently, no one from the Orioles or Majestic looked for a vintage photo showing the backs of those 1954 jerseys, even though the Internet did exist back then. The 1954 jerseys showed up (from Majestic) with player names on them, and only THEN was I (the vintage jersey expert) asked if the jerseys were supposed to have names. The answer was "no," so ALL of the jerseys had the names removed the day before and the day of the game. And the black back numbers had an orange outline, also wrong, but we only had time to fix one thing.

(Left) The back of a 2004 Orioles TBTC with incorrect orange outlines and low numbers after incorrect NOBs removed. (Above) A closeup of the back shows remnants of the former NOB.

Back in 2014, the Orioles revisited the 1954 throwbacks and this time remembered to omit the names on the back. They still got the number font wrong, using the top layer of the current style instead of a slightly thicker version of the Royals plain block with feet (serifs). Since that game, a few of those jerseys have been brought to the stitcher job for numbering, and I always have to ask (with a deep sigh), "Do you want the number to match the throwbacks, or do you want it done right?"

Despite some aggravations, I've really enjoyed putting my skills to work on jerseys that have been worn in big league games in stadiums and on TV. My store days ended in 2019, so I got my own heat press and industrial strength sewing machine to equip my spacious basement workshop to enhance jersey collections near and far.

Mark Huesman has been stitching his own jerseys for decades, along with working at Baltimore-area shops that have given him the opportunity to do work for several professional teams in different sports.

© GameWornGuides.com

Joe Hilseberg
Baltimore-Area Stitcher

Growing up I had always had a thing for design and logos. I was always doodling my favorite logos on my schoolbooks and by the time I had gotten to high school, a majority of my doodles would be sports logos and uniforms. I was really into teams that had great uniforms. Also around this time I was really getting into the NHL, although we did not have a team in Baltimore. My favorite player was Ed Belfour of the Blackhawks. I just really loved his mask design and thought that the Blackhawks had some of the best looking uniforms in the league. He was also amazing in Sega's NHL 94!

That year for Christmas my parents bought me my first Blackhawks jersey. It wasn't personalized yet because the local shop was swamped with Christmas orders. I went the shop a week or so later to drop it off for customization and struck up a conversation with the owner. I discovered that they were the ones that did the lettering for all of the local sports teams, including my favorite, the Orioles. I was really impressed. I joked that I wished that I worked there and I was told that I could start tomorrow!

An example of the first version of the Orioles' 1999 Cal Ripken, Sr. memorial patch with a white border, colored in with Sharpie by Joe and his coworkers.

I ended up working there in some capacity for the next eight or so years. Full time in the summers, and part time during the school year. Even on some weekends after I got my first job at a graphic design agency. I was just hooked to being a part of creating jerseys. To this day I still have a heat press in my house so I can create whatever comes to mind.

Two Cal Ripken, Sr. memorial patches from Joe's collection. Joe and his coworkers decided how the memorial should look, rather than the team or MLB, and Joe cut the twill himself, by hand.

One of the cool parts I really liked about working there, and with the Orioles specifically, was when we had to do something special or unique to the jerseys. Most commonly this was with any sort of special patch or memorial.

1999 was one of those years that stuck out because we had to create and apply all of the memorial patches for Cal Ripken Sr. They were just simple pre-made full block 7's that we had ordered to be used for the home and road jersey. Black was out of stock for our initial order, so we had to use ones with a white border, and had color them black with a Sharpie! We switched most of them when the black ones arrived.

© GameWornGuides.com

The ones for the black alternate jersey were a different story. In order to have the black 7 pop off of the black jersey we decided to have an orange and white outline around the 7. Each one was hand cut by me out of tackle twill and then sewn on by our seamstresses. I still have two unfinished ones I kept for my collection. The cool part was that WE decided how it should look. Not sure if that would happen today.

That same year was also when the O's were playing a mid-season exhibition game against Cuba at Camden Yards. We had to put all of the large circle patches on our jerseys and the only spot that made sense was where the Cal Sr. 7's were. We had to remove all of them, replace them with the Cuba patch, and then put the 7's back on above the bird patch on the left sleeve. What a nightmare!

We put all of the patches on the Cuba jerseys too. It was crazy seeing the difference in quality between their jerseys and MLB ones. Their jerseys were really thin, and all of the lettering was heat-applied flock. For that game the O's decided that they would provide the Cuban team with new satin jackets. Of course they didn't exist yet, and we found out about it the morning of the game!

The sleeve patch worn by the Cuban National Team and the Orioles for their 1999 exhibition game, which Joe applied to jerseys for both teams,

We rushed to get C's hand cut to be used on the jackets that matched the hats… well at least that was Mark's job. I had to bolt from our shop outside of Baltimore down to Upper Marlboro to pick up the jackets from the supplier. A 130-mile trip! I got the jackets and made it back to the shop in less than 2 hours! Not sure how I didn't get pulled over! We applied the C's and sent them to the stadium all by 5pm. A crazy day! I also still have one of the C's that wasn't used as a souvenir.

A player from the Cuban team wearing a jacket that was a gift from the Orioles, and the work of Joe's company.

It was crazy days like this that made doing the uniforms fun. It was a different time back then. The local shop was more valued and relied upon for more of the load. It seems now that more and more is being done by the manufacturer and by machines. It's a shame.

In addition to stitching in Baltimore shops, Joe Hilseberg is known for making sure his friends and family (mainly his twins) have the best looking gear, usually made by him. He is also an award-winning and nationally recognized BBQ pit-master, who has taken on Tuffy Stone, Moe Cason, and Myron Mixon… and come out on top.

© GameWornGuides.com

Readers' Questions

Chapter 43

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

I receive many letters with comments and questions. I am delighted to hear from readers, and try to respond promptly to every message if I can help. On the following pages are some of the most interesting questions readers have asked that are not already covered elsewhere in this text.

Restoration/Lettering Questions

I have a MLB jersey from a semi famous player that has a lot of wear and the lettering is faded. Is it worth more if I restore the lettering and trim?

Generally when an item is in its original condition, and is not restored, you should leave it alone. Things are only original once. Replacing the team wordmark and the player name and numbers because they have faded and show use is not a smart idea generally. If you are looking for a jersey that is nicer and you want to wear it to the game, by all means create a reproduction and sell the original to somebody who will value it in its current unrestored state.

I have a MLB jersey that was worn by a 1980s semi famous player. The name and numbers have been changed. It is worth more if I restore it back to what it originally was?

Whenever anyone asks me anything with the word "worth" or "value" in the question, I ask them to stop and take a step back. The first question I ask is, what is your purpose in owning it? Do you want to wear it and enjoy it? Do you want to cash in and sell it to the highest bidder? Or do you want an interesting story to tell. Usually the answer is a combination of all three.

Things are "worth" exactly as much as the next person is willing to pay for them. And most of the collectors I work with are less interested in selling and more inclined to enjoy keeping, growing, and discussing their collections with friends and other collectors.

If it makes you happy to restore a modified jersey in your collection to its original appearance, by all means follow these rules that I observe in my practice.

- Perform an accurate restoration. Make sure that the original fonts and fabrics are used, and that the light table is used to lift all available ghosts so that they are perfectly covered with the replacement lettering. I also age (media blast and organically dye) new lettering to match the patina of the old as much as possible; it just looks better.
- By all means—document the restoration! I recommend at the very least a Letter of Restoration, or preferably a full Letter of Opinion of Authenticity of every jersey that is altered. Without it, the future owner will have no idea if your restoration is accurate—or if you simply modified a blank jersey to appear to belong to a famous player, therefore destroying the collector value instead of enhancing it!

Here is a link to a document with more detail on this topic.

A seller on eBay offers pre-cut authentic jersey lettering for sale. Is this a good deal?

It could be, but only if the seller is using good materials cut from correct patterns, and you have a plan in advance to complete the sewing after the lettering arrives in the mail.

Regarding quality, start by ordering one set and see what you think of the quality. If you are satisfied, then order more.

Regarding sewing, don't underestimate the difficulty of finding someone who can and will do the work for you to your specifications. So, I would advise to FIRST find someone in your area who will agree to do the sewing. Don't be surprised if local shops refuse to do this sort of work. Few want the hassle of dealing with sewing your lettering on your jerseys—because if it is done wrong, they know that they will be left with the work to fix it, possibly damaging both the garment and the lettering in the process.

Very, very few people are able to do the stitching with the precision collectors expect. Unless you have a sewing machine of your own, the confidence to try, and all the many colors of thread that you'll need to do the job right, this may not be the best option for you.

This on-line advertiser offers a complete selection of lettering kits that appear slightly less than accurate. If they look OK to you, don't let me stop you. (mine are correct to team specification, and are shown applied to the jersey. Theirs are shown loose and skewed to the sides.)

© GameWornGuides.com

Can I cut and sew my own lettering?

Professional shops cut twill using automated cutting machines that read right from the computer files, but if you are doing one or two, and are reasonably artistically skilled, you can trace the lettering on graph paper and cut the twill by hand with a sharp scissors.

The problem is in the cost of acquiring the raw materials. Tackle twill is available in a wide range of colors but is generally sold in rolls or sheets in quantities that are aimed at a commercial lettering shop, not for a hobbyist with a single jersey to letter.

If you are planning on customizing many jerseys, buying the patterns and twill may be a consideration. If you have only a few to do this may be fun to try but is probably not a cost-effective solution.

Regarding stitching, there is nothing magic about sewing numbers and letters on baseball jerseys. If you have a sewing machine and have practice with a zigzag stitch you can do it. You can spray adhesive on the back (like 3M Super 77) to tack it down. While athletic twill has a heat-sensitive adhesive backing that tacks it to the fabric, I strongly recommend against trying to heat the lettering to tack it down, as you are likely to scar the jersey with too much heat. Sewing many layers of twill together may require more power than some home-use machines possess, but two layers shouldn't be a problem for most.

What are jersey nameplates made from?

Nameplates should be made from the same fabric that makes the jersey. Some people substitute twill fabric, but it is very difficult to match the color and texture this way. Even whites don't match well. The manufacturer makes a matching quantity of knit cloth available to the lettering shop when the jerseys are ordered, often precut and even with the edges hemmed to prevent fraying. The edges must be hemmed before the nameplates are used.

Now, many of the jerseys being restored by collectors are older and are not easily matched with new, currently stocked fabrics (see the pages entitled "Shades of Gray" in the "Basics" chapter). Add to this the fact that older jerseys are faded or dingy because they have been washed dozens (or hundreds) of times, and the issue of color match becomes even more apparent.

The most likely source of donor fabric for old jerseys is old uniform pants, or sometimes other cut-up jerseys. Well stocked shops (like mine) or individuals skilled in restoring uniforms often will have an inventory of old uniform pants that they can use to make matching nameplates.

Keep all of these things in mind when considering the cost for restoring or lettering old jerseys. Good work costs good money, and if you find someone whose work you like, try not to be too price sensitive if you want to keep that relationship strong.

Properly sewn, team-spec nameplates should usually be serged around the edges before they are sewn on the jersey to look original prevent fraying . This is extra work that many retail shops don't bother with.

© GameWornGuides.com

I bought a jersey and I want to change the player name and number. Can I take the old name and number off? Will it leave marks?

Tackle twill is usually both sewn and glued on. If you carefully remove the thread and apply a warm iron to the back of the garment, sometimes it is removable leaving few marks. At the opposite extreme the lettering might be glued so firmly that it will not come off at all. The actual result is typically somewhere in between. Usually the lettering will come off but leave some glue marks behind, which can be removed with dry cleaning fluid. The more sheer types of fabric like Cool Base are very susceptible to fabric pulls and discoloration, so exercise particular care with these.

Back in the "old days" (pre-2000) jerseys were routinely stripped and reissued by teams. The whole purpose of tackle twill lettering was to make this easy and possible. Pulling the thread and a little cleanup, and the jersey could be reissued to another player in a jiffy. But the combination of new tech fabrics that are very thin and are easily damaged, and the fact that teams just don't reissue jerseys to other players anymore, so they are less worried about the remove-ability of the lettering, mean that recent jerseys are harder to re-letter.

Since forever, all stitched pro jerseys have used heat/pressure adhesive as well as thread to hold the lettering in place. However, many/most of the new tech fabric jerseys (Cool Base/Flex Base) use a very sticky adhesive backed twill that is meant to be applied without heat. In general, most lettering can be still removed with enough time and patience. But unfortunately, we won't know if there is staining underneath that is permanent until we take things off.

Generally, dark colored, full-weight knit jerseys (not Cool Base) are the easiest to strip and clean. Light colored jerseys can be a challenge if the old lettering has been applied with too much heat, because heat can cause the color of the appliqué to leech into the fabric. With too much heat the color is not "on" the fabric anymore, it is "in" the fabric and once the chemical change happens, there is no reversing it.

The worst projects to tackle are multi-color stitched-through lettering designs with drop shadows, like the current San Francisco Giants and the 1990s New York Mets. The current Cincinnati Reds is the absolute worst case. There is a tremendous amount of thread holding these letters in place, and on the drop shadows, backstitching is used on the sewing machine to reinforce the application. Removing all these thread clumps and knots from tech fabrics is very time consuming and the result is often less than desirable, leaving perforations in the cloth.

Removing lettering from some later-issue Mitchell & Ness double knit jerseys is daunting, as these are stitched on giant industrial sewing machines that apply thousands of tiny tracer stitches as part of the automation process.

Especially on very old jerseys that have been sent to the minors and re-lettered, expect to see fabric sun-fading around the numbers when they are removed. This really can't be easily addressed.

Removing lettering is done with a seam-ripper from the front (lettering side) of the jersey. You must work slowly and carefully. The seam ripper is very happy to rip holes in your shirt if you aren't careful. After removing thread, if the lettering is still stuck down, it is best not to force it off. I have chemicals that will dissolve the glue and prevent damage to the fabric beneath. I can send you a "how to" document that shows how to use a seam ripper.

What does this mean? Clearly, it is always best to start with unlettered, blank-back jerseys for your project. But sometimes this isn't an option, and if you buy previously-lettered jerseys, budget around $55-$75 to have the old lettering removed, glue cleaned, and the jersey laundered/fabric steamed to remove traces of the old stitching holes. And be prepared to accept a result that may not be perfectly undetectable.

This video shows me using the dry-cleaning gun to remove glue/ink staining.

© GameWornGuides.com

Authenticity Questions

Should I have my jersey(s) authenticated?

There are a number of reasons to have your jerseys professionally authenticated, and some reasons why it might not make sense, those which I'll cover at the end of this discussion.

Authentication is a good idea to cement the value If your jersey is of a notable player (not necessarily a superstar). Once done, keep in a safe place you won't have to think about it again. Reasonably speaking, the cost of the authentication should be more than made up with the enhanced selling price or value of the item in hand.

Most auction houses will insist on an authentication, and if you don't provide them with one they accept, they will get it done for you, at your expense. You will pay the price they quote you, and some will not share the full results with you, especially if it does not pass. And you will generally not have an opportunity to choose or to speak with the authenticator at all. If you are selling yourself, say on eBay, a trusted authentication is "a must" to get the true value of your item. I often hear, "I don't need an authentication because I am not planning on selling my collection," but unless you are somehow immortal, you are not going to live forever; your collection will certainly outlive you! Your spouse, or worse, someone who doesn't really care about you or your collection will be left to disburse it after you have gone. They will generally have no idea what to do with it, and it is likely to be sold for a fraction of its value. I dislike immensely talking with people who brag about what they "stole" from a widow.

You can get your jerseys looked at if you simply want peace of mind, or for possible recourse from a recent purchase. Many jerseys I evaluate were purchased with the stipulation that they will pass an independent authentication. Sometimes, sellers hope that simply making this offer to you will convince you that the jersey they are selling you is an authentic collectible and you won't bother to check. Unfortunately, a significant number of jerseys I have evaluated in this situation have not passed my inspection and were returned within the time limit the seller stipulated. Don't let your heart cause you to make a poor investment ownership decision you can't recover from.

Steps to Take

If you have a jersey in your collection that you would like evaluated or authenticated, or a significant collection of jerseys that you want to have properly insured against loss, I can help. Consider your objective:

• Are you just curious to learn more about what it is and where it may have been used, for your own information, and see if a deeper examination is warranted?

• Do you want a detailed authentication done for the purpose of cementing the value of the item, or for possibly selling it either now or sometime in the future?

• Do you want to try to photo-match your jersey to actual game use?

• Do you need authentication done for estate or insurance purposes, either for a collection of retail authentic jerseys or for individual valuable pieces?

To make this easy, for all these choices, let's break it down:

Level 1: A Quick Look Evaluation "for your information only"

I don't believe in wasting your money or my time. The purpose of this exercise is to determine if a deeper examination is warranted. If you wish, for $75, I will take a look at your jersey, either in-hand or from a good set of photos. I need to see stitching (from the outside and inside) and tagging. I'll comment on what I see, based on my experience, in a brief telephone conversation. This service does not include a written document. From this evaluation, I will absolutely not be able to tell you if your jersey is game worn.

If you then opt to have me do a more detailed authentication for you, I will credit you the cost of this initial evaluation.

Level 2: Detailed Authentication, Evaluation, Photos, and Write-Up

For suspected team-issued or game-worn, or especially any significantly historic jersey to command a good price at auction, it quite simply needs to be authenticated. For example, if you suspect you have a Gary Carter Mets jersey that you think was worn during the 1986 season and want to make that claim in your listing, with a legitimate letter of authentication you might get $5,000 for it. Without one you might get $900. It's that simple. Clearly, the investment in having it credibly authenticated is worth the expense.

I only authenticate things I can hold in-hand. I try to keep my pricing simple and affordable. Keep in mind it takes me as long to examine an item and determine it is authentic, or not authentic. Frankly, the inauthentic ones often take me longer.

© GameWornGuides.com

Other Authentication Services

If you were to lose part or all of your collection in a fire or by theft, you will quickly find that your homeowners or renters insurance policy simply does not cover "collections." If you have any sort of a collection, the burden is on you, in advance, to document what you have. After it is gone it is simply too late to decide to document it.

Insurance Valuation Letter

If you have a significant number of retail authentic jerseys or more common-player game-worn jerseys hanging in your closet, for a negotiated fee based on the amount of my time required, I can help you put together an inventory document to submit to your insurer that shows a reasonable retail replacement value for these items. My experience is that, after a loss, telling the insurance company that you had 50 authentics that are now gone, they will be disbelieving and will ask you for proof of the purchase of each one. Unless you keep records better than 99.9% of everyone in the world, you will not be able to provide that documentation and they will not pay the claim. My documentation will record and certify that you did in fact have this many authentic jerseys and their average retail replacement value is nominally $250 each… that's $12,500 in total you would otherwise be "out".

Letter of Professional Opinion / Document of Restoration

Gil Hodges #14 New York Mets 1962 First-Season Game Used Home Jersey

Examination Date: February 19, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0219J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Spalding-made size 46 (measures as a 48), cream colored flannel with chalk blue pinstripes, seven-button, year tagged 1962 New York Mets home jersey. Very short sleeves, barely 3 ½" long at the tops as was typical of 1962 Mets. Diamond shaped underarm gussets each with 4 hemmed vent holes. The original set of white pearl buttons are affixed. Mets slanted team wordmark across both front panels, in dark Royal blue felt over orange tackle twill. This hybrid of mixed fabrics was used by the Mets and several other teams in the early to mid 1960s. The 1963-1964 World's Fair patch, a later addition, (either by the team or a later collector/owner of the jersey) is sewn on the right sleeve. As received, the jersey wore the replacement numbers 46 on back. By their method of attachment (a crude straight stitch) and their mismatched and worn appearance with heavy glue applied to the backs: they are wrinkled and frayed - certainly "takeoff" numbers from another jersey, I would judge these to have been numbers reapplied to the jersey for later use in spring training or the minor leagues.

Restoration Performed: The tagging in the neck indicated that this jersey originally wore #14, as issued to Hodges in 1963. He was the only player that year who wore that number. At a listed playing stature of 6'2" tall and 200 lbs, this jersey would have fit Hodges. From excessive use, the tops of the shoulder seams had split open on both sides, I repaired this damage by reshifting the seams. The light table revealed the clear impression of the original number "14" on the back. To preserve the originality of the jersey, I re-used the take-off "4", and I replaced the numeral "1" from another take off number salvaged from another vintage Mets jersey, so that the shrunken size and vintage aging/colors of the lettering might match more closely, though they are not an exactly perfect match. I stitched them in place with matching faded orange thread. It is important to note that because vintage numbers were used, they are significantly shrunken from original due to hot water washing decades of time: the present size of these numbers are notably smaller than the fabric ghosts they are sewn overtop of. This mis-match happens because of disproportionate fabric shrinkage: the applied numbers have shrunk much more than the fabric beneath them, causing the jersey fabric beneath to pucker significantly. When the numbers are removed, the fabric beneath, when stressed, expands back somewhat closer to its original size. The shrunken numbers re-applied over the fabric are therefore almost an inch smaller than the ghosts they cover.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Spalding tail tagging using the correct 1963-vintage blue/red/silver embroidered fabric label. Punch-sewn under the right perimeter and sewn around all edges. There is no size tag present. Pinch sewn on its right side is a flag tab that reads: SET 1 1962. Several inches below at the edge of the tail and on the inside of the jersey is the standard Spalding six-line, red on white linen printed wash instructions tag. The Spalding makers' tag is extensively frayed on its right and left sides as is typical of these jerseys when they were oversized; the fraying extends right up to the white straight stitch used to hold the tag to the jersey. Close examination does not reveal evidence that the tag was removed or re-sewn; the white stitch is still tight. The white "set 1" flag tab appears to be original showing some discoloration and edge wear.

Stitched into the back of the collar inside the jersey is a 6½" x 3" piece of white felt with the inscription 46 62 14 hand chain stitched in blue on it (Size 46, 1962, player #14). This matches exemplars for 1962 Mets home jerseys in our library. The felt tag is sewn through only the outer layer of the collar's fabric showing that it was correctly applied before the jersey collar was sewn shut at the factory. It shows partial detachment on the bottom left side due to failure of the edge of the felt fabric.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Here, the jersey as received prior to restoration. The numbers "46" on this jersey are clearly "take-offs" from another jersey, but have been on here for some time as was evidenced by the puckering beneath them. The edges of the ghosts of the original 14 are highlighted in white. At left, the scanned outline of the removed "6" in black is only 6 7/8" tall, overlaid on the stressed fabric of the jersey showing the magenta outline of the ghost on the newly expanded fabric that had previously been puckered beneath the numeral measuring 7 ½" tall. For reference, the original number master pattern had been 8" tall. All of this size variance is caused by wash shrinkage.

Wear & Repairs: Despite having been through a season of MLB use, and assumedly more than a season of use in the minor leagues given its number change, the jersey remains in remarkably good condition, with the orange outline of the Mets crest on front still generally bright and undamaged, though the twill edge is coming detached in some places, most notably on the leading "M". The dark Royal blue straight stitched top liner is intact but shows some fading and color chalkiness from many washings and exposure to bright sunlight and the elements. While the jersey fabric has thinned somewhat from use and there are some dirty scuff marks on the tail, the jersey is generally clean and is free of major damage.

Exemplars shown: Original examples of inaugural year 1962 Mets home jerseys are scarce, and I have not personally authenticated these, but you will see that he details match, including the tagging in both the tail and the back of the collar.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in generally good condition. It has been restored to its original appearance as worn by Hall of Fame player Gil Hodges using its original-style vintage Mets numbers. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Hodges in the 1962 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

Authentication of individual valuable items for insurance/estates

There is no avoiding it—if you have jerseys in your collection worth more than, say, $250 each, you need to have an expert's letter certifying their authenticity if you hope to be covered for their damage or loss. And, if you want to insure a valuable item for its true worth, your insurance company will certainly require an authentication and possibly an appraisal before covering a collectible item for its market value. Without any question, getting valuable items authenticated is a wise investment.

When not to authenticate?

Frankly, there are many jerseys that are not worth an independent authentication, from a financial standpoint. These include jerseys, say, post-1987 that were issued to non-star players, and recent jerseys that come with a MLB authentication hologram and a reference in the MLB database. (Though, for famous players or jerseys from big events, many auction houses will still require an independent third-party authentication to lessen the chance of representing a fraudulent item.)

© GameWornGuides.com

I just bought a jersey from a seller who claimed it was game worn by Ozzie Smith/Gary Carter/George Brett/Curt Schilling when he played for the Cardinals/Mets/Royals/ Red Sox. I will send you photos. I am now thinking it is not real. Can you tell me if you think it is authentic?

I am asked questions like this one all the time, and as a professional authenticator, it is unwise for me to offer casual opinions on any jersey's authenticity. While for a long time I have politely declined any comment, I now offer a structured and limited $75 "quick look" service for such items. This service is designed to allow an owner (or potential purchaser) to decide if an item is worth a more detailed evaluation. It does not include a written evaluation. Contact me, Bill@TheDream.shop, for more information. A short document is linked here explaining the process.

I have a team issued Sandy Koufax jersey from when he was a Dodgers spring training instructor in the 1970s. What do you think it is worth?

It sounds like a flippant answer, but it is true…any item is worth exactly what the next buyer will pay for it. I casually but regularly monitor jerseys sold at online auctions and note that they sell for predictable and consistent prices over time. At these auctions there are few insane bargains, and few sales that conclude for amounts far higher than I would expect. It's a fair market—and this is good for both buyers and sellers. Conversely, the "asking prices" for similar items from many (but not all!) dealers are often 20-50% higher than the same items will bring at auction; you can tell if a dealer's prices are higher than the market if you see the same items in stock for sale month after month after month. Dealers who turn their inventory over regularly are pricing their items more closely with what the market will pay. It's pretty simple.

Regarding your Koufax jersey, you don't mention provenance—which is true proof of an item's origin. For the sake of my reply, I'll assume that your item is authentic, but you don't have any real iron-clad proof that it is. That's the real status of most items like yours in the hobby. It wasn't carelessness, people were just happy to acquire an item like this and didn't bother with all the details of where it came from or how they got it. But based on looking at the results of thousands of auctions, I can make the following observations.

The first issue that will influence a buyer paying top dollar is provenance. And "top dollar" requires really good proof that an item is real, like a certificate on official letterhead signed by the Dodgers and Koufax and then notarized, with corresponding photographic proof that the item in hand is the same one referenced in the letter.

Secondly, jerseys worn by famous players when they were coaches or instructors do not command the same value from hardcore collectors as items worn during their playing careers. It's just the way it is. Sandy Koufax never wore a double-knit jersey during his playing career; he retired several years before they came about.

Your best guess as to the worth of an item is to search various auction houses, dealers' and online auction sites for already-sold items like yours. eBay over the years has been a very stable predictor of the street value of collectibles of all types. Items there rather go for much more or much less than my conditioned expectations, and are based strongly on items' proof of legitimacy.

Finally, if you want to try to sell it with minimal risk, sell it with a "reserve" on auction. This way if your price is not met it won't sell. Keep in mind that many bidders will not participate in reserve auctions on principle. The simpler solution is to make the opening bid the minimum price you would accept for the item. Just be aware that this will also discourage some bidders as well.

Why don't you use more examples of famous players' jerseys when you show photographs in each chapter? I would rather see more photos of real Barry Bonds or Derek Jeter jerseys than those of players that nobody has heard of.

The reason for the inclusion of mostly "no-name" players is that in determining authenticity, it is very valuable to be able to see clues that are present in the game-prepared jerseys of everyday players, because these are far less likely to have been tampered with and are more probably completely original. Many star player jerseys in the hobby are not authentic originals. My goal is to provide readers with the basic facts of authenticity, and therefore when given the choice of including photos a common player jersey of or one from a superstar, I will skip the famous jersey almost every time.

© GameWornGuides.com

My question is why did some teams use two different jersey companies, even in the same year? And why was the lettering not the same on all jerseys by all makers?

It was not at all uncommon for MLB teams to have used two or more vendors to create the teams' uniforms in any year. In fact, as you look through the pages of the Guide you will see that it is actually more common than not.

The reason is financial. Companies like Wilson and Rawlings want to be publicly associated with Major League teams. Supplying the Mets with uniforms translated into tens of thousands of little league and high school uniforms sold in the New York area, and even more balls, bats, gloves, and sets of catcher's equipment. For promotional consideration of some kind, equipment was offered to the MLB teams at a substantial discount in most cases or might have been "paid for" in part or in full by a corresponding advertising team licensing agreement. Keep in mind that before 1987 there were no manufacturer names of any kind visible on MLB uniforms, by the rules.

In choosing multiple companies to supply uniforms, teams multiplied the amount of money they could save on needing to purchase other equipment. In the Mets case, during the early 1970s Rawlings supplied the team's home uniforms and Wilson supplied the road ones. Other teams (like the San Francisco Giants, Chicago White Sox, and Atlanta Braves) for many years have had two suppliers, each one delivering a full set of each home and away uniforms. These were sometimes noted as "SET 1" and "SET 2". Typically, teams had two full sets of uniforms, both road and home, for each season. This was in case a day game followed a night game, or a uniform was damaged or lost/stolen. Some teams, notably the Oakland A's for several years, used as many as five suppliers for the team's myriad of alternate uniforms.

Which brings us to the question as to why the team scripts, graphics, patches, and numbering were often different when comparing jerseys made by different manufacturers. I can't say that the reason is "nobody cared," because that would probably be a blanket statement that is just not true. But I will say that branding and graphical consistency was far less stringent because it was far harder to accomplish in the pre-digital age. Players were viewed in person from afar, in television and newsprint in grainy black and white images.

The ability to "preview" designs was just not possible under tight time frames in the pre-computer age as we take for granted today. And patterns for numbers and scripts were often made of paper with pinholes, or sometimes like cookie cutters made of steel or alloy, designed to be struck with a mallet from the top to cut the fabric that would be sewn to the uniforms. These patterns were created painstakingly by hand (by someone with blacksmith skills, literally!) and they were the possession of the uniform company that owned these precious dies.

So, telling Spalding to use the same patterns for numbers as used by Wilson was not a matter of sharing a computer digitizing file. It was often a matter of pinhole paper, or steel, solder, and craftsmanship. At the very least, the patterns were flat stencils made of hardboard, Talcum powder was sprinkled around the edges, and then someone with a sharp scissors went to work.

Even team wordmarks or logo scripts were re-created by each manufacturer on a drawing board, usually using various source material as a reference point. "Official artwork" belonging to the team marketing department was still years away. I worked in an art studio during the 1970s while in high school, and the cabinets that held original art were huge, shallow-drawer monstrosities, each drawer filled with cellophane taped together tissue paper, velum, and all smelling of India ink. This "was" the artwork—storing things on a hard drive for immediate retrieval, resizing and reproduction was not even imagined at that point in time!

Copies of the originals were made by artists taping tracing paper over the original and making a hand drawn copy. Increasing the size by 10%, say, required a large platform camera, film, and a darkroom, or it required some sort of a shadow box with pulleys and lenses (a "Lacey-Luci" was the trade name of one) that allowed an original to be projected onto glass and traced in a new size…all by hand using a sharp pencil and a French Curve.

The Mets example is a good one—different versions of the fairly simple Mets script were used by Spalding/Wilson/Rawlings and Goodman (who used two different styles—one in the 70s and one in the 80s). I am certain people noticed, and probably it annoyed some greatly, just as inconsistencies in uniform lettering annoy people now. But it was less well-distributed and was just something that people lived with then. A simpler time, it was!

© GameWornGuides.com

Tagging variations from normal

Mr. Henderson:

I have a question about the 1984 Wohlford and Rose jersey Rawlings tags that are in your Montreal Expos section. I noticed the Rawlings tag is the four-line variety (1985-1987), even though the flag tag reads 1984. Was it possible that 1984 jerseys had the 1985-1987 four-line washing instruction Rawlings tag?

My answer:

Thank you for writing! It is these sorts of little inconsistencies that I am delighted that people pick up and share with me.

The dates of manufacturer tag use are approximate. I suspect that this means that the tag style I noted as being first used in 1985 probably actually started some time in 1984. The old stock was used up (both jerseys and labels!) before the switch was made to the new style tag across the board. If you told me it was a 1990 team tag on a 1984-era jersey, I would take special note—but this is close enough to be likely legitimate.

Finally, any characteristic noted on a jersey of a famous name player (like Rose) will cause me to address the item with a heightened level of suspicion. People fake these jerseys all the time, for reasons explained in the chapter "Is it Game Worn?" But if the Wohlford jersey has the same characteristics, my suspicions would be mostly eased, in this case. I doubt many people are making fakes of his jersey.

Team year tagging is incorrect?

A retired MLB player writes to ask:

I found your book and all the research fascinating. I have a question and have attached a photo of my first jersey.

I was drafted by my first club in 1970. I wore this flannel jersey during my first Spring Training camp in 1972 . Notice that the tagging on the jersey's tail says it is from 1970.

Why they would add my name to a uniform in 1970 and let it sit for a few years until Spring Training of 1972 is a mystery to me. Maybe they just held onto it when I was signed, and lettered it when needed. I wouldn't have thought anything of this until after I read my team's chapter in your book. I know it is authentic because it is mine!

My answer:

The fact that you were drafted in 1970 and your 1972 Spring Training jersey has a 1970 year tag is probably just simple coincidence. Old stock that is sitting around from prior years is used up, especially when your team's uniform design has stayed the same for many years. As a Spring Training rookie, your jersey may have been used before by another player and recycled, or it may have been "old stock" lettered for your first use.

Note that for the regular season, your team switched to knit jerseys. So surely, if you recall, you were issued a new knit jersey for the regular season since you indeed made the big league squad. Thank you for sharing with us–it is very cool that you have saved your first jersey.

(His reply: "Your Opening Day scenario sounds logical. Hell, I was there and I don't remember!")

© GameWornGuides.com

Financial Questions

Should I get insurance for my collection?

- Collectors are often surprised when they take the time to calculate the replacement value of their collections. Even owning 30 authentics of the common variety can be valued reasonably at $5,000. Yet very few collectors bother to make sure their collections are insured, and that's a mistake.
- The trouble is, simply insuring collections is not easy to do. You will probably find that if you contact your current homeowners' insurance company that they will have vague answers for you. The most common answer is "We don't insure collections but will insure specific items of value if you can provide an appraisal." This answer is problematic for most jersey collectors, because getting your collection appraised is not as easy as, say, having a coin collection valued.
- However, first consider the retail value a new, store bought authentic and use it as a baseline. Ask your insurer if they will accept this as a reasonable replacement cost for any single item in your collection. If they agree, this may be good enough for most collectors. Today, most "common" game worn jerseys are valued under $250. Assume that you can get $180 as a retail price valuation for each, and if the insurer will accept this as valid in the event of a loss, it may not be worth the additional trouble to get an appraisal done. In this case, I believe it is good practice to send your agent a detailed, itemized list of your collection whether they ask for one or not, to refer to in case of a claim. Update it yearly. If you have particularly valuable items that ought to be appraised or your insurance company will not accept a retail estimate of value, by all means have these items appraised. Having a collection that is worth many thousands of dollars left uninsured is just plain irresponsible.

© GameWornGuides.com

General Questions about the Book and Collecting

Are all the uniforms in the book in your collection? How many uniforms do you have and where do you keep them all?

I own in the neighborhood of 1,500 authentic MLB knit jerseys, but only a few flannels. Probably 2/3 of them are game worn. I have casually been looking for "one of every style" without really imagining I'd ever reach that goal. Most of the ones I am missing now are the really hard to find ones, jersey styles from the 1970s when the only jerseys ever made were the ones the team used, when there were almost none made for retail sale. Not surprisingly, these are the really expensive ones as well. While some of my collection is indeed pictured in this book, most of the photos I use are not my jerseys. Over time I have looked for examples that are better than mine, sharing with other collectors and collecting photos from select, reputable dealers. I have purposely avoided sharing examples of jerseys from star players unless I have authenticated them myself. The chance that a un-authenticated star player jersey is contrived in some way is too high for me to consider using it as an example in a trusted reference like this one.

I have a large dedicated storage closet, almost 25 feet long and two jerseys high, where my collection is hung in team alphabetical then chronological order.

Double-knit jerseys are easy to store safely. As long as the place is dry and without direct sunlight, it's usually OK. There are fewer worries from things like moths, discoloration, or decay that affect natural fabrics like cotton and wool.

© GameWornGuides.com

It seems that game worn jerseys from the 70s and 80s are much smaller than those from more recent years. Have players gotten that much larger?

The average jersey size today is indeed significantly larger than the average jersey size 20 or more years ago. I have no scientific data on player size, but it does seem that there are far more beefy linebacker-sized players in MLB today than there were 25 or more years ago.

However, I think the biggest contributor to this change is in how the players prefer to wear their uniforms. Skin-tight was the style back then, baggy is the norm now. Styles change, and the trend has begun to swing back. After all, baggy was fashionable back in the 40s and 50s too.

Sizes of jerseys (or men's suits) are actually the measurement around the wearer's chest. A size 44 represents a 44-inch chest measurement. Therefore, a size 44 jersey laid flat should measure 22 inches across the front at the armpits. Back in the 70s and 80s, many of the gamers were size 42 or 44 and they actually were 42 and 44 inches in circumference. Today there seem to be far more jerseys in the size 48 to 50 range because players like to wear the uniforms loose and baggy. Today's jerseys also often run larger than their printed size by as much as two inches, varying by manufacturer.

Check out these photos at right from the 70s and 80s. Those are some tight pants!

Top: The Athletics line up for the start of the 1989 World Series. Bottom left, the photo of 1982 Expos show why that team's uniforms of the era always seem to be at least one full size smaller than the label says. Those pants are so tight you can almost read the labels on the underwear. Bottom right, Brewers players in a 2007 Turn Back the Clock game simply have it all wrong.

© GameWornGuides.com

Yellowing knit jerseys

A former MLB player writes to ask, "While cleaning yesterday, I opened the drawers that store the uniform tops from my career. I was surprised to find that some of them have yellowed over the years. What can be done to restore the original white color without damaging the lettering?

My Answer: Your problem is a common one, and happens especially often with 100% nylon jerseys, vs. those that are "100% polyester," these being a blend of nylon and other synthetics. The early Pirates jerseys and the Goodman Dodgers jerseys are very susceptible to this, among others, and I don't know exactly why it happens, though it appears most frequently on jerseys that are folded and in drawers vs. those on hangers in the open air. I suspect it has something to do with the nylon contacting the acids in wood in a piece of furniture over a period of time.

The lettering on these uniforms is very resistant to damage, luckily, so the yellowing in the fabric is usually removable without negative effect to the twill. Here are the steps I follow:

Use Woolite diluted at 25% in a basin of warm water, and lightly scrub the yellowed areas of the jersey with a bristled brush. Then soak the jersey in Woolite and water for a few hours, kneading it and rubbing the fabric gently against itself once in a while to circulate the soapy water through the material.

After the pre-soak, rinse it thoroughly and hold it up to see if the yellowing is gone. If not, repeat the process. Afterwards, washing the jersey in the machine on gentle cycle will often do the trick.

If this doesn't work, move next to the same process with Oxiclean, and then finally Clorox II or a very diluted chlorine bleach as your last resort, keeping the soaking time to an absolute minimum. The first thing to fade with bleaching is the thread that attaches the lettering, then the knit trim The rest of the garment are usually very resistant to damage. You should see some Twins jerseys that I have scrubbed with almost direct bleach to get them clean...the Twins are another team than never wasted a penny, and their facilities had reddish dirt that seemingly stained everything !

Air dry, do not tumble dry when done. Then hang them on hangers with air circulating around them and they will be good for a few years again.

© GameWornGuides.com

Why don't you print this as a hardcover book and sell it that way?

I'd love to print it. But the result would cost more than 99% of buyers would be willing to pay for it. I have looked at all sorts of alternatives, including printing in black and white, shrinking the pages to fit four screens on a single open leaf of a book, grossly abridging the content, printing the American League separate from the National League—and the math just doesn't make sense; I still end up north of $100 per copy. I'm afraid I'd end up with hundreds of unsold copies getting musty in my garage. Maybe someday I'll figure out a solution. In the meantime, some avid readers have printed and bound their own copies by bringing the file to the local copy center. One reader told me he did it overnight on the color printer at work. Shame on him. The photo above is my editing copy for the 2007 edition which is only 1/3 as long as the current one, and shows how thick this work is when printed two screens to a page on regular letter paper!

Could you show an example of every jersey from every year for every team?

Where this seemed like an impossible idea at one point, we have gotten much closer to that ideal. There are thousands of new photos in this edition, as well as pages showing the actual sleeve placement of commemorative patches, World Series patches, and memorial armbands

Are you ever going include jerseys going back before 1970?

If I live long enough, yes. I am asked this question more than occasionally, let me answer candidly. I would like to author team-by-team editions that cover the postwar years, and I do have many thousands photos that would support the effort. The challenge, and my commitment, is that any research I would publish on such a topic must be very accurate, and the amount of research I would need to do to compile such a work to ensure accuracy that is up to my standards would be staggering.

Compared to this book which covers 1970-2025, there are a few important factors that make covering 1945-1969 a much harder task:

1) There are far fewer surviving examples of original, unaltered jerseys from these decades. First, in those days the only team jerseys made were the ones that were made for the players to wear! Teams made-do with two sets of jerseys that had to last an entire year, and sometimes they would be used for two years or more. Then, when the club was done with these uniforms, they were often stripped of all lettering, patches, and team insignias, and sent to the minor league team to have something else sewn on them to be used for a few more years until they were truly ready for the rag bin.

By my educated estimates after doing hundreds of restorations and authentications, 95% of all pre-1970 jersey have been altered in some way between the day they were originally issued and now. As a researcher, I don't want to represent photos of items that are inaccurate as the model for collectors to reference as the real thing.

2) Research of original source documents is far more difficult in these decades. Not only was it a long time ago, but in those decades there were far fewer photographs taken. Photos were for the newspaper, for the most part, which had a shelf life of one day. Newspapers from major cities are available on microfilm at larger libraries, featuring grainy and toneless black-and-white photos, but the time, effort, and expense to research this bygone era properly is 100 times harder than doing research on the past 50 years. I have the greatest admiration for author Marc Okkonen who documented the history of baseball uniforms year-by-year all the way back to 1900 in his now long out-of-print book Baseball Uniforms of the 20th Century, last printed in the early 1990s.

Do you plan to expand to include caps and jackets? Socks? Pants?

No. I have decided to limit my research to team jerseys.

© GameWornGuides.com

Document of Restoration

If I am doing work on your game worn jersey, a critically smart idea

If you are having any restoration work done on a game worn jersey, I strongly recommend you add this step. It is a short but very important document that explains and shows with a few photographs what we did in our work. This simple step can be the difference between your item being accepted or rejected by an authenticator, auction house, or buyer in the future.

The problem: When an authenticator puts your jersey on a light table, evidence of that jersey's past life comes to life. If you are returning a player jersey to its original configuration after a stint in the minors, I always do my best to put the replacement lettering perfectly and directly overtop any original ghosts that remain. But now, after repair, what the authenticator will see is the ghosts of the old, removed minor league or reissue lettering. Their conclusion may well be that the jersey has been tampered with to turn it into something it was not. Let me be clear: You do not want your jersey to fail an authentication. In our digital age, databases are kept and shared so that the next person researching your jersey at another place and time may stumble on this data and at worst, incorrectly assume you are trying to commit a fraud.

The solution: Having a document of the process of your jersey's restoration becomes a part of its permanent provenance. In it, I will include photos of before, and after, and a short paragraph or two about the work that was performed. While this is not an authentication in itself, it can accompany a full authentication document, one that I can also do for you if you wish, while the jersey is in my hands.

A sample Document of Restoration is offered on the next page. My charge for creating it is only $75, and having it at the time of resale may mean hundreds, or even thousands of dollars of difference in the price realized.

Final thought: If your response to this is: "No, I sure don't need this. I am not planning on selling. I am going to always keep it." I hate to be so blunt, but your collection will most definitely outlive you. And someone you love is going to be charged with selling your collection after you have left us. The worst calls I get are not from widows with undocumented collections to sell, but are instead from smug people who brag to me about what they "stole" from a seller who didn't know what he or she had. Invest the $75 and keep the document with your important papers, and forget about it.

The Dream Shop: http://GameWornGuides.com http://TheDream.Shop

Document of Restoration

San Diego Padres 1977 Home Jersey #37

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: San Diego Padres Wilson-made 1977 home jersey. As received it was #53 and without a name on back. Jersey is tail tagged 37-77. Clear glue/shadow evidence exists of the original #37 on back and front, as well as the removal of a nameplate, likely for use in spring training of the minor leagues. All thread holding on the front wool mark is bleached grady white.

Work Performed: Removed the numbers from front and back, replaced with new ones using team font and matching to the shadow of the original numbers. Replaced name on back per 1977 roster on nameplate exactly matching the team alphabet font and vertical arch lettering style. Nameplate was made from a pair of used game pants. Twill lettering was media blasted prior to stitching to jersey to reduce the sheen for a better match to the original lettering, and all was sewn with bleached-color thread for a better match. Spot hand re-dyed the existing bleached brown thread.

William F. Henderson
Restoration Specialist and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications
Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
The Dream Shop: MLB Jersey Restorations

Document of Restoration

San Francisco Giants 1981 Road Jersey- Whitson

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: San Francisco Giants black road jersey with 1981 year tagging, lettered for O'Malley 35 with the team 1982 patch on the sleeve. Research and light table evidence shows that this jersey had originally been issued to pitcher Ed Whitson in 1981. Both of the front numbers had changed, the nameplate replaced and the back number "5" was unoriginal. The front team script and the "3" on back are original.

Work Performed: To return the jersey to its 1981 appearance: Removed the front numbers, sleeve patch, nameplate and the back numbers. Because the back #3 was so worn and stained, we elected to make an exact duplicate rather than attempt to make all new work match the worn out 3. Cut and stitched new elements, sewed with bleached orange thread to match the original front wordmark, aggressively cleaned the fabric and covered a hole in the back that had been caused by the rough removal of the original number 2. Cut and sewed replacement name on back in Giants vertical arch style on a properly serged-edge black knit nameplate Media blasted and dyed the new lettering to more closely match the patina of the old, stitched in place exactly over the original ghosts as seen on the light table. Stitched on new numbers on front and back with color matching ivory thread. All removed elements were returned to the collector.

William F. Henderson
Restoration Specialist and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications
Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
The Dream Shop: MLB Jersey Restorations
http://GameWornGuides.com http://TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

"Quick Look" Validation Service-
What your $75 gets you, and what it doesn't

I am frequently asked if something "looks authentic". I am a professional and I don't like to give flip answers, but I realize that some jerseys are not worth getting a $250-$500 authentication done. I also know that some people simply might like an educated second opinion before buying an item that they've seen offered for sale.

For $75, I will examine your item from a detailed auction listing, a good set of photographs you email to me, or if you prefer, you can send the item for me to see. If taking photos, I need good straight on photos of front and back. I want to see ALL the tagging, close up, from the back and front, including inside seam tagging if it exists. I need to see the lettering stitching detail inside and outside. I want to see the trim and buttons.

I will invest up to a half of an hour of my experience comparing your example to my massive database of images, and to other full evaluations I have done. I'll research auction results if I need to.

Then I"ll schedule a short phone call with you to discuss what I have seen, and give you some food for thought. From this, you can make your own decisions about what to do next.

Very importantly- what it's not

- A "Quick Look" does not include a written document.
- It also does not permit you to tell a seller that I have looked at their item, and for you to tell them what I think. Rather, any discussion you have with another party must be positioned that the thoughts and observations are your own. Any conversation with a potential seller that starts with, "I asked Bill Henderson to look at this and he said..", is just not what this is about. Please just don't do that, for both of our sakes.
- I will not be able to tell you that your jersey actually game worn from a "quick look". About the only way to do that is with a photo match, or a trusted letter of provenance.
- I will not be able to tell you what something is worth.

It's also important to realize that for some items, a "quick look" just may not be a responsible solution. I must reserve the right to decide not to offer an opinion. If this is the case for you, I'll tell you so before we even begin, or will simply refund your money without offering an opinion. I don't want to waste anyone's time or money.

A "quick look" is a first step. If you decide you want a full and written authentication, I will credit the money spent on it towards the full authentication.

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 44

Acknowledgments & Closing Notes

The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Contributors – Tenth Edition through 2025

As the list of contributors has grown quite long, I want to express my sincere thanks to all the individuals and organizations who have assisted in gathering data, researching events, checking for errors, and proofreading. With each new edition, I receive a wealth of contributions and corrections, all of which I deeply appreciate. Compiling a research volume like this is an ongoing process—there is always more to learn and more to add.

Many collectors are acknowledged throughout this book for sharing photos of items from their collections. Their names appear in the captions accompanying each image.

I would like to give special recognition to Rick Subrizio, who served as the editor of this edition. Rick did far more than simply edit; while I focused on updating all pre-2020 content, Rick took on the enormous task of collecting and creating the hundreds of pages documenting jersey changes and additions from 2020 to 2025. Given the sheer volume of changes during this time, this edition simply would not exist without his dedication.

Collector Steve Kraljic made substantial contributions as well. In addition to providing images from his extensive game-worn jersey collection, he updated the team summary pages at the beginning of each chapter and proofread the entire text for accuracy and consistency—a Herculean effort.

I also want to give special thanks to those sports memorabilia auction experts who care deeply about the integrity and authenticity of the products they represent and who generously allowed me to share photos from their past auction catalogs, sprinkled throughout this guide. These include:

Crown Sports Auctions
12018 West 95th Street
Lenexa, Kansas 66215
https://www.crownsportsauction.com/

Goldin Auctions
160 E 9th Ave suite a, Runnemede, NJ 08078 https://goldinauctions.com/

Heritage Auctions
2801 W. Airport Freeway Dallas, Texas 75261-4127 https://www.ha.com/

Huggins & Scott Auctions
2301 Broadbirch Dr., STE 150
Silver Spring, MD 20904
https://www.hugginsandscott.com/

Hunt Auctions
256 Welsh Pool Rd. Exton, PA 19341 https://huntauctions.com/

Juilen's Auctions
13007 S. Western Avenue, Gardena, California 90249
https://www.juliensauctions.com/en

Kruk Jerseys
210 Campbell Street
Rochester, MN 48307
https://www.krukcards.com/

Lelands Auctions
435 NJ-34 unit h, Matawan, NJ 07747
https://lelands.com

MEARS Online Auctions
1234 Manitoba Ave, South Milwaukee, WI 53172 https://www.mearsonlineauctions.com/

Robert Edward Auctions
P.O. Box 430
Chester, NJ 07930
https://robertedwardauctions.com/

SCP Auctions
32451 Golden Lantern, Suite 308
Laguna Niguel, CA 92677
https://scpauctions.com/

© GameWornGuides.com

A sincere thanks to the individuals and organizations listed below for their contributions to this and prior editions:

Will Allison
Tom Ambrosini
David Averette
Kirk Baethke
Martyn Bailey
Jeff Barak
Todd Bargman
Brandon Bartholomew
Jonathan Baum
Esteban Bejarano
Nathan Benitiez
Gianpiero Berandi
Paul Bielewicz
Brad Bierman
Jimmie Boulware
Christopher Boyd
Jeff Brown
Craig Brown
Peter Capolino
Dan Cavanaugh
Michael Cesarano
Tony Cocchi
Bobby Coronel
Jeremy Crandall
Chris Creamer
Doug Creamer
Tim Crowder
Derek Damian
Keith DeLaet
Nick DiSalvo
Joseph Dixon
Steve Dodell
Aaron Doster
Robert Eden
Patsy Elmer
Tom Entwistle
Todd Evans
Ben Farlow
Matthew Fast
Joe Fisher, Majestic Sportswear
Frank Fleizach
Mark Fletcher
John Fonte
Douglas Ford
David Frost
Jeffrey Frye
Jim Gates, Baseball Hall of Fame
Steve Geiger
Bruce Genther
Michael Ginsberg
Howard Gold
Gordon Green
Brian Guardado
Greg Guy
Trent Guyer
PJ Halbrooks
Guy Hankel
Jim Haught
Mark Heusman
Brady Hibbs
Joe Hilseberg
Wes Hogan
Wes Holden
Rob Holecko
Headley Hollandsworth
Frank Holman
Dominick Hyman
Jay Jackson
Daniel Jackson
Scott Johnston
Mark Kaczorowski
Jeremy Kahler
Harrison Katapodis/ dormroomjerseys on eBay
Sean Khalifehzadeh
Steve Kraljic
Nate Krumpos
Robert Kuhl
Brandon Kuhn
Jason Lacombe
Dominic Lazo
Matt Lenaghan
Ryan Leong
Moriah Levin
Jonathan Levin
Bill Liebe, The Liebe Company
Scott Little
Rob Loeffler
Robert Loglisci
Jonathan Longar
Lance Lopera
Paul Lukas
Kyle Mace
Ryan Magathan
Corey Magee
Nick Maier
Bob Malandro
Mike McGee
Chris McShan
Chance Michaels
Randy Miller
Storm Miller
James Millet
Todd Morss
Jay Oates
Rick Ogata
David Pacific
Mark Peterson
Alex Pineda
Alejandro Pineda
Massimo Poulson, Kruk Cards
Terry Proctor
Mike Quick
Todd Radom
David Randolph
Robert Reed
David Reeder
Jerry Reuss
RGVDEAL on eBay
Alex Rocklein
Steve Sale
David Sanchez
Mike Santangelo
Jason Scott
Owen Seaton
Jay Shelton
James Sheu
Alex Shuman
Tim Stephan
Aaron Stilley
Rick Subrizio
John Swain
Brian Sylvester
David Taub
Jason Taylor
Derek Teets
David Tobener
Dan Van Unen
Joe Varner
Rudy Visokay
Nick Waddell
Warren Waterman
Bob Welsh
Jared Wheeler
Dwayne White
Paul Wiederecht
Trevor Williams
Howard Wolf
Al Yellon
Ross Yoshida, Los Angeles Dodgers
John Zajac
Kevin Zdancewicz
Han Zhang

© GameWornGuides.com

Research Notes

CHRIS WILKINS/AFP/Getty Images

Photo Credits

I confess that as I collected photographs over the years I did not consistently make notes of where they all came from. Many are fair-use watermarked proofs from Getty Images, UPI and the Associated Press. If you notice a photograph within that is yours that is not properly credited, please drop me a line and I will add the credit in the next edition.

Many of the jerseys pictured are from dealer inventories and other enthusiasts' personal collections. As these items change hands over time, perhaps when looking through this guide you'll see a jersey that you personally own. I hope you will be pleased with the fact that it is being used as an example of correctness to other collectors.

Gaylord Perry being honored in festivities before the 1993 All-Star Game, wearing a special jersey with the lettering of every team for which he played. That's Reggie Jackson on his right.

Edition Changes

Rather than try to highlight a long list of specific changes for readers of past editions, I have placed a small coding dot at the lower left corner on pages that have been significantly changed since the 2019 Ninth Edition:

- A Green Dot means that the page is new and that the information documented here is new and was not found in previous editions
- A Yellow Dot means that the reader should note additional facts or changed i information and photos on this page, significantly changed since the last edition.

In many cases I have added new photographs but have not added new information worthy of note. These pages are left unmarked.

© GameWornGuides.com

Team Publications Used in Research

Team publications- like yearbooks, scorecards and programs are a good source of photos, but they often use studio head-shots of players, photos from prior seasons or photos taken in spring training. Game action photos most times come from prior years. These can be a very useful resource, if they are not the sole source used to determine dates of uniform usage.

(Far Left) This Braves 1972 Scorecard features a year-correct 1972 photo of Hank Aaron on the cover. The 1972- only font of the front numbers is the giveaway. (Center and Right) However, these other two team publications' cover photos are not accurate for the year printed on the covers. Each shows photographs from the prior year when the teams wore different styles.

© GameWornGuides.com

Using Baseball Cards In Research

Let me first attest that I am absolutely not an expert on baseball cards. Cards may be the most prolific source of old time photos of players dressed in uniform, but they are often terribly inaccurate for dating uniforms, and I never use them as a sole source of research.

The main reason is that the photos on the cards rarely come from the regular season of the year that the card is released for. Only since the late 1990s have cards started to show current-year photos of players with any degree of regularity.

Usually, the cards show the prior year's photos, (if not older ones) or are photos taken in spring training. This is not helpful if we are trying to nail down the details of a style worn in a particular regular-season. Spring training uniforms are almost always the prior-season's old uniforms; new regular season uniforms are not broken out until opening day.

Sometimes, the photos on cards are doctored in the most un-Photoshop 1970's prehistoric fashion! A traded player wearing a flannel Indians jersey might have the Indians script airbrushed out and sports a Cincinnati Reds cap literally cut and pasted on his head.

It is not uncommon to see a 1973 card bearing a picture of a player taken in 1972 spring training, wearing a 1970-issued jersey.

Throughout this guide I've sprinkled period baseball cards showing particular styles being worn. But these cards are rarely issued in the year of the uniform I am trying to illustrate,they are usually issued a year or more later.

Some typical examples: on 1972 cards, Dodger Jim Lefebvre wears a 1969 uniform. Next to him Wes Parker wea a 1971 flannel uniform. The Astros Jerry Johnson wears a 1972-74 uniform on his 1975 card. Ken Henderson wears a flannel 1971-72 uniform on this 1973 card. It's 1973, but Von Joshua sports a 1963-69 era Dodgers jersey. Tim Cullen of the first year 1972 Texas Rangers wears his 1971 Senators uniform with all logos airbrushed away. Rod Carew wears what is probably a spring training jersey with no name on back in a year when the Angels most likely wore names during the season.

© GameWornGuides.com

News Photos and Magazine Articles in Research

These are a much more accurate source of current year information. Newspaper wire services (like AP or UPI) almost always run photos of the prior day's game, and they are helpfully dated, though they are nearly always in black and white.

Magazines like Sports Illustrated almost always run current photos with their stories, in color. These are good sources to validate styles or variations worn in a particular year.

But, it would be a mistake to assume magazine photos are always from the current year. The Sporting News 1985 Yearbook at left features a 1984 photo of Tony Gwynn on the cover. An easy give-away is the fact that 1985 Padre uniforms changed styles and looked completely different.

© GameWornGuides.com

Web News Sources Used in Research

As we have established already, the Internet is a wonderful fountain of information that is readily available. Yet it is filled with unchecked, often thoroughly incorrect information. Unfortunately, errors published on the Internet gain a life of their own, being replicated and repeated at the speed of light until they are believed to be facts.

Therefore, for any photos I have taken from the Internet I always try to verify the dates from a second source.

A fantastic example are the millions of photos that are available to preview on Getty Images, (www.gettyimages.com) a site used by publishing and news professionals as a nearly unlimited archive of licensable news pictures. Anyone can go there, type in a few search words, and within seconds can be viewing news photos from last month, or from forty or more years ago.

Regarding baseball images, I have quickly learned that while the dates and photo captions are interesting, they are very often incorrect citing the wrong players, places and especially incorrect dates. This is not a complaint, just a caution. Readers write to me citing Getty Images as the source of their information, but further investigation on my part often determines that Getty's dates are inaccurate. Still, it is a wonderful resource if used in conjunction with other research to corroborate details.

Getty Images Photo Caption: OCTOBER 1971: Pittsburgh Pirates' manager Danny Murtaugh poses for the camera with a well dressed youngster from the crowd during the 1970 World Series at the Three Rivers Stadium in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. (Photo by Focus On Sport/Getty Images)

The photo at left was certainly not taken at Three Rivers Stadium in Pittsburgh as the caption claims. Manager Danny Murtaugh is wearing his road gray uniform

Getty Images Photo Caption: FLUSHING, NY-1972: Willie Mays #24 of the New York Mets and Cesar Cedeno #28 of the Houston Astros talk during batting practice at Shea Stadium during the 1972 season in Flushing, New York. (Photo by Focus On Sport/Getty Images)

I can tell the photo above was taken in 1973, not 1972 as the caption claims. The Astros used this vertical arched wordmark on the front of their gray uniforms in 1973 only.

Getty Images Photo Caption: Nick Esasky swings
1988: Nick Esasky of the Cincinnati Reds swings at the pitch during a MLB game in the 1988 season. (Photo by: Jonathan Daniel/Getty Images)

This photo caption claims it was taken during the 1988 season, only the Reds had changed uniform styles in 1988, and all 1988 lettering was outlined in white. This photo is from 1987 or earlier, and that is not Nick Esasky, either.

© GameWornGuides.com

Acknowledgements

Finding facts about isolated games that happened many years ago sometimes starts with a single thread. Even with the resources of the Internet available, the research on this page took me two hours to do. But finding the date of the game helped in finding a photo of a game worn jersey to show in the Mets chapter.

How Research Is Done From a News Photo

These two tiny photos were the only evidence I had from an unknown TBTC game. Follow along to see how these tiny images offered the researcher clues to their origin.

1) First we looked for clues from the players in the photos, difficult because the images are grainy; there are no names on the Met uniforms; and the Reds' base runner's numbers can not be seen. But we can tell the Mets are in home uniforms and the Reds are in grays.

2) But both Met players are easily identified. Rickey Henderson controversially wore Willie Mays' (unofficially retired) #24 during the two years he played there. #99 is pitcher Turk Wendell (5 years with Mets) covering first base. At right Dave Collins coached first base for two years. The only time all three of these people would have been in these positions simultaneously could have been 1999 or 2000.

4) The teams are reprising 1969. We can tell because the 1969 MLB patch is visible on Henderson's sleeve as he slides into second base, almost surely trying to break up a double play. It is highly likely that the Mets were commemorating the 30th anniversary of their 1969 World Series Champs. Therefore 1999 is more likely but...

5) …notice how many of the players in long sleeves. A check of the weather for the four dates in question shows that on June 1 and 2 1999 it was very warm during these days with temperatures in the mid 80s or higher, and cool at night with temperatures dipping as low as 52 degrees. , But April 25 and April 27, 2000 were cooler days with nightly lows of respectively 39 and 46 degrees. Hmmmm…

3) To narrow down the search further we perused the box scores. There were nine games between the Mets and Reds in New York in 1999-2000. Both Henderson and Wendell played together in only four of them. Henderson was on base in all four, and the runner appears to be safe in the right photo so Wendell would not have gotten a putout for his effort in the box score. Knowing who that runner is would help a lot.

In the end, the author's conclusion tips slightly to either April 25 or 27, 2000. Mets collector Nick DiSalvo verifies that indeed this game was played on April 25, 2000. Flannel jerseys by Mitchell & Ness with a special 4-25-2000 tag on the tail. Mystery solved!

© GameWornGuides.com

About the Author

On Facebook, Look for and follow the page Bill Henderson/Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys as well as his jersey restoration website, The Dream Shop.

Bill Henderson readily admits to a lifelong obsession with baseball uniforms. Born in 1961 in suburban Philadelphia, he grew up watching the perpetually last-place Phillies and did his best to emulate them in Little League—despite not being a particularly good player. As a pitcher, he earned the nickname "Ball Four," and after coming home at age nine complaining of being hit by a pitch, his mother solved the problem by keeping him home lest he get hurt. Denied the right to wear the uniform he had earned, he wondered if he'd ever wear one again. Today, friends and family joke that he may never stop until he owns every uniform.

Bill has since established himself as both a professional authenticator and a historic restorer of authentic jerseys. He now pursues this passion through The Dream Shop, the company he founded.

Happily retired from corporate life, Bill previously enjoyed a long career as a marketing executive for international companies in industries entirely unrelated to baseball. His work took him all over the world, including several years living in Japan in the early 2000s.

In addition to authoring the book you're reading, Bill has painstakingly recreated nearly every game-worn player name and number font used in Major League Baseball since 1970, using original uniforms as reference. This comprehensive body of graphical research is preserved in the collection of the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum in Cooperstown, NY. His historically accurate fonts have been used commercially by Mitchell & Ness, Majestic, and others—and are occasionally (though not always) seen on the field during MLB's Turn Back the Clock games.

Bill's interests extend well beyond baseball. He restores vintage automobiles and regularly writes articles on antique auto restoration for hobbyist magazines and websites. He also plays the violin and enjoys performing with amateur symphonies, pops orchestras, and community theater pit orchestras in the Philadelphia area, where he lives with his family.

© GameWornGuides.com

About the Editors

Rick Subrizio, editor of the Seventh through Tenth Editions. A life-long Red Sox fan, Rick learned his love for the game the way many do – from his father. His interest in sports uniforms also came, indirectly, from the same source. When Rick was 8 or 9 years old, his father bought him a replica Red Sox jersey from the souvenir store across the street from Fenway Park.

Years later, after graduating from college with a degree in English, Rick was fortunate to work for his hometown Red Sox in marketing and public affairs. He went on to earn a law degree, and has worked in marketing and communications for educational institutions and in the nonprofit arts field.

Rick lives outside of Boston with his wife and two young children. He still has the replica Red Sox jersey.

Stephen Kraljic, Contributing editor, 10th edition - Steve's fascination with baseball began as a long- (and still) suffering Mets fan after attending his first game at Shea Stadium in 1976. What started with baseball cards and box scores grew into an appreciation for baseball aesthetics — especially the bold colors and wild experiments of 1970s and early '80s uniforms. He collects vintage baseball jerseys, with a fondness for rare one- or two-year styles that captured fleeting moments in uniform history. He holds degrees from Notre Dame and NYU, and has spent his entire career in commercial real estate finance.

Moriah Levin, editor of the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth editions. In addition to this Guide, she has edited From Swampoodle to South Philly: Baseball in Philadelphia & the Delaware Valley (The National Pastime), contributed to the Uni Watch blog, and held multiple roles with Mitchell & Ness Nostalgia Co. between 1993 and 2006. Moriah lives in South Philadelphia.

© GameWornGuides.com

Chapter 45

Introducing The Dream Shop

Exacting Jersey Restorations, Professional Lettering, Original Creations

I've been an MLB jersey collector for many years, and it is my passion for the history of the "look" of the game that led me naturally into my role as a historian and author. Now, I've taken the step to retire from my corporate career and move full-time into researching and restoring game worn jerseys.

In 2017, I first hung out my shingle as sole-proprietor of "The Dream Shop," promising MLB jersey customization done correctly, as well as offering the highest quality restorations of game worn jerseys. I was frankly amazed at the response. Before the year was over, it was clear that if I wanted, I could do this full time, and in late 2018, I decided to make the switch.

Since then, I have added two stitchers and a fabric cutting specialist to the team, but I still do all the customer contact, research, art, and layout myself. It is my goal to remain small and highly focused on quality and customer satisfaction. I pride myself on setting realistic expectations, delivering an excellent product, all while providing excellent communication. I think these three items are key to the success of any business.

A basic description of the services I provide are on the next page. Examples of my work follow. For much more information, please visit my website, http://TheDream.Shop, and for regular updates follow my blog at https://www.facebook.com/gameworn guides/

Email: Bill@TheDream.Shop

Restorations

- For decades, MLB teams sent their old jerseys to Spring Training and to the Minor Leagues for reuse, where player names and numbers were stripped and changed. Sometimes even the front scripts were removed. I can expertly restore these jerseys to their former appearance.
- I have recreated nearly all the fonts for player name and numbers for every team and every year going back into the 1950s. I use a light table and computer tools to determine what was originally on a jersey. I use this information, as well as my library of historical media, to recreate what once was.
- I stock dozens of colors of tackle twill and felt, and inventory more than 200 pair of game used MLB pants that I use to make exactly matching player nameplates. I use various proprietary methods to pre-age and color correct twill for accurate re-lettering of aged originals, including stitching with age-bleached thread colors. I stitch everything just as it was done originally.

Customization

- With painstaking research, I have recreated the actual team fonts and the hundreds of custom cutting patterns needed to customize blank jerseys or re-letter prelettered ones for every team, every jersey style and every year.
- I strive for accuracy in every detail: knowing whether your jersey gets a name on back or not, a nameplate, the proper arch of the player name, the proper size and placement of front and back numbers, the right colors of twill and correct outline thicknesses, to name just a few details.
- And at no extra charge, I will always send you a proof for your approval before I sew a thing, a unique aspect of my service.

Recreations

I am a skilled graphic artist and can recreate your high school jersey, a jersey from the minor league club that played in your town when you were growing up, or strictly one-off MLB jerseys that simply are not available anywhere else in reproduction. You need to supply me with your ideas and the blank jersey (or jersey I can strip) to use as a donor canvas. I'll do the rest.

For example, here, I was commissioned to recreate an exact copy of Don Mattingly's high school baseball jersey. Using the donor jersey at top right and a few available photos from yearbooks, I made the jersey shown bottom left.

A key note: I know I do good work. I know that what I create could be passed off as original and not a reproduction. Therefore, every reproduction I make is tagged on the inside, invisibly when worn or displayed so that in the future it is unlikely to be innocently passed off as something illegitimate. My goal is to make it difficult for someone to knowingly commit a fraud.

© GameWornGuides.com

Authentications

My massive collection of game worn jerseys as well as decades of research and my collection of nearly one million reference photos allow me to reliably authenticate your jerseys. My reputation means that my opinions are accepted by collectors worldwide and by the major auction houses.

I am knowledgeable, detailed, and fair, and charge market rates for my services.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Dennis Martinez 1981 Baltimore Orioles Gray Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: April 1, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0401J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray, six button, size 42 (marked and measured) with special 1" extra length tailoring tagging, though at 35" in length, the jersey is actually 2-3" longer than standard, Rawlings Baltimore Orioles road jersey, issued for #30, pitcher Dennis Martinez. Sewn-in black/white/ orange 1 7/8" knit sleeve end trim and 7/8" black/orange knit neck trim, Grey pearl four-hole buttons, "Orioles" script with underline slanted across both front panels in orange tackle twill outlined with black. Player name and number lettering is in the Rawlings fonts and in the same two colors. #30 on the left chest and centered on the back, name on back "D. MARTINEZ" is radially arched in the extra-condensed Rawlings name font (the first initial added because pitcher Tippy Martinez was on the roster also during the early 1980s), in the proper are on an exactly matching gray nameplate with a single needle surged edge and with proper width borders. Until I handled this jersey, I was unaware the Orioles used the extra condensed font for long player names on 1981 player jerseys, but a period photo of Martinez verifies that indeed they did.

Dennis Martinez enjoyed a long and productive 23 year career pitching for five teams in MLB 1976-1998. A four-time All-Star, he was the first Nicaraguan to play in the majors. In 1981 he appeared in 25 games, all but one as a starter. He compiled a 14-5 record with a 3.32 ERA and 88 strike outs, having nine complete games with two shutouts. He led the American League in wins that year. The final three years of his career he held the record as the oldest player in the majors (1996–1998).

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings red rectangular "The Mark of a Pro" locker tag in the style used in 1981 is stitched on the inside of the bottom right tail, small white "1 Inch Extra Length" tag pinched underneath the bottom edge. "Set 1 1981" white flag tab is pinch-sewn under the right edge. A survey of Martinez jerseys worn throughout his long career show that his size increased dramatically, from size 40 in his early career to size 48 twenty-three years later at his career's end. This one is consistently sized with others in our survey library from this stage of his career.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all lettering on this jersey, including the nameplate, is original and untampered with. It has all the correct elements of a team issued jersey matching exemplars, and displays strong use and wash-wear. The tagging is wrinkled and worn, the lettering is all slightly softened, mildly puckered and with a few frayed edges and loose threads. There is little to no puckering of the fabric behind the lettering and alls stitching is still tight and unbleached. There is a 1" diagonal pale white streak on the back jersey tail that may be paint or glue. It appears that this jersey was pulled from service at season's end and avoided a second tour of service in the minor leagues which was the fate of most Orioles MLB issues.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It is team prepared to the exact player specifications of Dennis Martinez, and has no alterations or contrivances of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue and game used, prepared for Dennis Martinez of the Baltimore Orioles in the 1981 season.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Letter of Professional Opinion

Dale Murphy Philadelphia Phillies 1991 Home Game Worn Jersey/Pants

Examination Date: November 15, 2022 Certification Number:22-1115JP01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1991 Philadelphia Phillies Rawlings size 48 with 2 inches extra length home jersey of outfielder Dale Murphy. Rawlings six-button-front full weight warp-knit white w/maroon pinstripe jersey in the specific style that the Phillies wore 1989-1991. The jersey is autographed on the left chest above the team crest. (I have no professional opinion on the autograph.) All lettering is two-layer, Cardinal Red twill outlined in white. The player name "MURPHY" is radially arched and sewn on a serged edge knit nameplate. Player numbers "3" on front right and on back in the correct font and size for the 1991 Phillies. Phillies team disk patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Sewn-in maroon knit trim on the shoulder tops and down the sides. Murphy wore both size 46 and 48 jerseys late in his career, and the size and tailoring are reasonable for his use. Rawlings team and player tagged 5-belt tunnel, zipper and snap front pants are size 37; same maroon pinstripes and with maroon side trim sewn in.

Dale Murphy enjoyed an 18 year career and was one of the biggest stars of the game and a fan favorite, especially during his 15 years with the Atlanta Braves, 1976-1990. He earned consecutive NL MVP honors in 1982-1983, was a 7-time All Star , and won 5 Gold Gloves and 4 Silver Slugger awards. He was traded to the Phillies late in the 1990 season, and played his last full-season of games in 1991, appearing in 153 contests (544 at bats, .252 average, 18 HR). While he played the next season in 1992, he was limited to only 18 games due to injury, and was then traded to the expansion Colorado Rockies for the 1993 season where he retired early in the season.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Jersey is properly team-tagged matching exemplars for the 1991 Phillies, Rawlings white tag inside the front left tail with the size of the jersey embroidered integral to it, flag tab to the left noting "Set 1 1991", tailoring tag pinch-sewn below noting 2 inch extra length. There is no player (name/number) specific tagging on the jersey. The pants are also flag tagged as SET 1 1991, and include a strip tag machine embroidered with "MURPHY 37/38 27 91" noting the waist size, inseam measurement and the 2 digit year. Rawlings script is embroidered onto the right sleeve end and the Rawlings circled "R" logo is embroidered just above the left back pocket.

Continued, next page

untampered with.
ys in each style) with thing of the maroon are bleaching, evident pants have a 1.5"
left side.

Conclusion: This jersey and pants are, in my opinion original and unaltered game worn team by Dale Murphy of the Philadelphia Phillies from the 1991 season. This is a beautiful original example of a professional MLB home uniform in a desirable style from a memorable star player of his era.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

© GameWornGuides.com

A Few Dream Shop Restorations...

Joseph Quinn is a friend and neighbor of former Pirate John O'Brien. Joseph found Johnny's original (but altered) Pirates jersey offered in a Heritage auction and asked me to fix it. At top left, the jersey as I received it from Joseph. The yellow staining is typical... yellow is an insidious color that tends to run, and stain other fabrics more than you would think. While the jersey was well used, it was still intact and had been properly cared for over its life. Removing the old back number, sometimes there is mystery, but not this time! The outline of the old original 6 was clearly visible from both the back and front. I make the new one of of layered felt, just like the original was, and straight-stitched it in place. I did not attempt to bleach the fabric. Messing with bleach on old flannels can produce unintended disastrous results. The way I see it, every mark and stain tells a story.

Johnny and his twin brother Ed were the only twin brother combination to appear on an MLB baseball card!

Johnny receiving his 1957 Pirates jersey from Joseph-- it's not a replica, it's the actual one he wore 62 years ago. And if this is how 87 years old looks, I can't wait to get there.

© GameWornGuides.com

Restoration of Rusty Staub's 1972 Mets Road Jersey

Here is the jersey as received. Staub was traded from the Expos to the Mets in 1972. The jersey was probably sent to the minors immediately after that year, and it was not treated well. The minor-league applied "Mets" crest on front was decidedly non-MLB spec, the blue trim on the front had been removed, and the Mets sleeve patch is bleached so much that the orange embroidery thread is now pink.

The numbers on front and back are original, though, and must be preserved. We're going to make it look like it did when Rusty last wore it, in September 1972.

It is autographed on front by Staub, and it was said to have been a gift to a New York police officer. Notably, in 1986, Staub founded the New York Police and Fire Widows' and Children's Benefit Fund, which supports the families of New York City police officers, firefighters, Port Authority police, and emergency medical personnel who were killed in the line of duty.

The first step is to carefully remove the minor league wordmark. The presence of an autographed inscription would make the use of any chemicals in this area very risky. Notice the neck tag-- hand chain stitched in the Wilson factory stitcher's familiar hand. The tag is made of flannel, surely left over from 1971 Mets uniforms that were made of this blue-gray material. 1972 was the first year in knits for the Mets. Staining of the linen placket lining is typical. Next, the stripped jersey goes on the light table, where if you look carefully and can see beyond the "METS" shadow, we can glimpse the ghost of the "New York" lettering that had once been there. We are going to restore it to its former place of honor. I recreate the front art using an unrestored original jersey, fine-tuning it to the shadows on the light table so it will perfectly match.

The tag decodes to Player #4, size 46, 1972.

© GameWornGuides.com

The art file I created drives the computer-attached cutter and cuts the lettering in two simultaneous, sandwiched layers like magic. But we can't just sew them on the old jersey. Compare the new lettering at top to the worn old "M" we took off the shirt. The shiny new lettering next to the old weathered numbers will look very wrong. We have some work to do to make this restoration look right.

I tack-glue the lettering to a piece of cardboard, and then media blast it in my blast cabinet. The blasting removes the sheen, lightens the fabric slightly and softens/frays the edges. This jersey is so worn that to make the new match the old, I really must heavily beat this new lettering in the cabinet, strafing it with fine abrasive fired from inches away at 120 PSI for over a minute straight.

The result is seen at bottom, left.

Next, I stitch the layers of the media-blasted lettering by hand, intentionally using thread that is several shades lighter than the twill to simulate age, closely matching the old numbers that are held in place with original thread that is severely bleached. This technique will make the old match the new much more closely.

In the meantime, I lightly spot-cleaned stains on the jersey that would show when the stitching was complete and steamed it to close-up the old stitching holes. The "Mets" shadow will never fully disappear, and it shouldn't. It is a part of history.

© GameWornGuides.com

I am fortunate to have some vintage 1/8" royal blue knit trim to restore the placket before re-applying the wordmark. Also notice my replacement of the missing sleeve-end black arm-band that was worn in 1973 for the passing of Gil Hodges

Next, the media-blasted lettering needs to be slightly dyed to match the old lettering it will sit beside. My secret concoction of organic liquid is heated on the stove to almost boiling and allowed to cool slightly, and then the letters get a bath. My solution helps stain the fabric to make it look like its been used and washed 200 times. The strength of the solution and the length of time I let it seep depends on how dramatic I want the effect to be. The goal is to make the brand-new lettering match the 45-year-old originals. Dyeing is followed by a cold-water rinse...then followed by blotting and slowly air drying on paper towels.

© GameWornGuides.com

Using the light table for alignment, I tack-glue down the pre-stitched letters onto the jersey front. The perfectly-placed lettering is sewn to the jersey directly on top of the ghosts using, again, a bleached-out shade of thread that closely matches the old original.

Here is a close-up of the result. The New York script matches the original number almost perfectly in color and sheen. The finished product, next to the starting point, is shown below.

To complete the job, I always recommend to collectors that they allow me to create an illustrated document of restoration for them, one that will be essential to cement the history of the jersey and important if it is appraised or auctioned in the future. Having such a document removes the guesswork for an authenticator and shows the craftsmanship that went into the restoration.

Document of Restoration

Rusty Staub 1972 Mets Road Jersey

As Received: This gray Wilson jersey had a very well worn non-spec "Mets" script logo sewn on the front and "4"s on the front and back. It has a 1972 MLB spec team tag in the collar. My estimation is that the Mets wordmark replaced NEW YORK on front when this jersey was sent to the minor leagues. It was common practice to replace the MLB team city name on road uniforms with something more appropriate for minor league use. The Mets sleeve "skyline" patch is also certainly original. Repeated laundering and exposure to the sun has caused it to fade heavily. The jersey is autographed on the front by Staub and includes a personal inscription. Part of the autograph ink touches and overlaps the edge of the front number. No attempt was made by me to authenticate the autograph. Notice the neck tag – hand chain stitched in the Wilson factory's stitcher's familiar hand. The tag is made of flatned, surely left over from 1971 Mets uniforms that were made of this blue-gray material. 1972 was the first year in knits for the Mets. Staining of the linen placket lining is typical. The tag decodes to Player #4, size 46, 1972.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications
Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
The Dream Shop: MLB Jersey Restorations

© GameWornGuides.com

1972 White Sox Road Jersey- Back from the Dead

"It's not worth saving. Just send it back to me and I'll decide later what to do with it."

That's what Mark Fletcher, the owner of this jersey, had told me. At his instruction, we had just completed another project, "borrowing" the front crest from this 1972 White Sox road knit jersey to transplant onto and restore a more valuable 1971 road flannel. This jersey was like the bones of the donor. And clearly, it had had a hard life: From all appearances, after being issued to infielder Bill Melton for the 1972 season, it was renumbered to 60, a perfect spring training number for a prospect, and then used for multiple years in the team's spring training camp. No roster player had been issued No. 60 in the following five years that this jersey would have seen duty (counting 1976 spring training).

"It will end up hanging in your closet for the next 30 years if we do that," I cautioned. "Then someone will throw it away. Let me restore it. It won't be cheap, but with proper documentation it will be worth something and you can sell it if you want." I knew it would be worth it because so few of these 1972 White Sox jerseys remain. The only ones made were the ones the players on the team wore — there were none made for collectors or fans, and most of the originals were stripped of their front script and sent to the minors.

Mark agreed. And he specified that he wanted it restored to look old, with the lettering media-blasted and dyed to make it match the patina of the base garment. And so we began the process of restoring a jersey that otherwise would have been discarded and forgotten.

This was our starting point — a very dirty, badly stained jersey shell, naked and with shredded trim. Prior to my getting it, someone had removed the "60" and then, likely seeing how badly it was stained underneath, just gave up on it.

Close up, we could see what appeared to have been a washing machine disaster: The fabric was stained purple in many spots, then bleached by the sun (especially on the shoulder tops, as is common). Glue and thread remained showing the outlines of its history. The front zipper was also history, hanging like a spiny noodle from the placket:

I used my light table to lift the images of what was once sewn onto the jersey. After doing this for many years, I have amassed a fairly compete set of team patterns culled from handling and authenticating so many jerseys. But when a jersey is this worn out, the fabric has often shrunk and become distorted from use and hot-water washing. On top of that, most original lettering was hand-cut with scissors, so no two jerseys are exactly alike. I needed to be sure that the lettering I cut for the restoration would exactly cover the rather pronounced ghosts. Here you can see the outlines of the original 14 from the back, with some distortion in the fabric under the “4.” I do not cut lettering with distortion baked in — rather, I cut it to spec and then shrink it with steam to make it conform:

Before and after- a teaser for what is ahead.

© GameWornGuides.com

Mark had told me that he had washed the jersey before he sent it to me. Nevertheless, this is what my hand-washing in OxiClean generated:

I then hand-scrubbed the stained fabric with a mixture of OxiClean paste (powder barely dissolved in a little water) and a diluted solution of Clorox. (Caveat: I do this outdoors and wear a hazmat mask.)

After thoroughly rinsing the jersey multiple times in clean water to remove all traces of the detergent, I dried the fabric by laying it flat in a towel and then tightly rolling it up in the towel. Then I hung it to dry in the sunshine.

© GameWornGuides.com

Meanwhile, I created all the necessary cutting patterns on my computer in Adobe Illustrator. For the red fabric, I decided to use is a slightly lighter color called University Red, not bright Crimson Red. I have found that when we age-distress the lighter shade, it looks more true to the aged patina we are seeking.

I laid the cut pattern images on top of the jersey photos to create a proof, which I sent to Mark for him to review and approve. Every job that goes through here gets a proof — it's an important quality-control step and gives the client a chance to see what the final product will look like and request changes. No surprises, no mistakes, no rework. (I mistakenly put "#15" on the proof sheet, instead of "#14." That was later fixed.)

The jersey needed a new zipper. Original 1972 zippers were made by Talon and had "Talon" lettering on the tab. Vintage Talon stock is available, but it takes a lot of searching and can be expensive, so instead I sourced a brass replacement that looked identical except for the tab lettering.

Trim needed to be reapplied. This 1972 jersey used the old-style flat-woven nylon uniform braid that was common during the flannel uniform era, not like the polyester trim that's used today. Luckily, I have a collection of vintage trim made on the original machines and from the original supplier:

After cutting the lettering, I test-placed it on the garment to see if it covered the shadows. The small "White Sox" lettering on the tail of the logo was hand-embroidered by my seamstress, Emily, who also sewed in the new zipper, the new trim, and all the lettering. We used off-color thread to make it look like it had been washed many times instead of brand-new.

© GameWornGuides.com

The next step was media-blasting. The lettering was tacked firmly onto cardboard and then placed into my full-sized blast cabinet and strafed with a hand-mixed compound of abrasives to dull the sheen of the twill, soften the edges, and make it look like it's been used and washed a bunch of times. Here are before and after photos — the photo at the right is after blasting.

See how some areas of the printed ink on the cardboard have been blasted away? That's how I know when we have done it enough! I also blasted the trim to age it, prior to Emily sewing it on.

We want this lettering to look severely aged, but tackle twill is normally impervious to dyes and bleach. So I mixed up this concoction in my kitchen and boiled it on low for about 10 minutes on the stove. The trim was also boiled.

Once the dyeing was complete, I rinsed the lettering and left it wet. Working with the jersey on the light table, I aggressively steamed the lettering on the plate steamer to make it conform to the shapes of the ghosts on the jersey. Subtle tweaks in the shapes of the lettering can be made while the pieces are hot with steam. I also steamed the trim the same way to give it some age and pucker. (I wear gloves to do this, because steam is hot and dangerous.)

Emily stitched the trim in place. Look at the lining on the inner collar — it was yellowed in the earlier photos but now it's bright and clean.

© GameWornGuides.com

The final result! This jersey will never pass for new — nor should it. It is still discolored in spots, but the overall garment has been brightened considerably and the color evened out, thanks to our careful but aggressive washing. I want to be clear that the majority of the discoloration in the fabric on this jersey was due to it being absolutely filthy. Skillful washing brought a lot of the color back. But garments that are badly faded are going to stay faded, you can't return the color if it's gone.

The replacement trim looks just as it should — not jarring and new but slightly yellowed and harmonious with the base fabric. The aging of the twill is subtle — you don't even notice it, and that's the point. If left crisp and shiny, it would look out of place.

There is some intentional distortion of the rear-jersey "4," to match the ghost beneath.

Notice that we did not touch the tagging. That's because a jersey's tagging is like the serial number on a car or a gun — it should never be tampered with, even if it's missing or in bad shape. Sure, a jersey with original tagging in perfect condition is worth more, but tagging that's been tampered with, even with all good intentions, makes the jersey all but worthless to serious collectors. Many auction houses will not even touch such an item.

The final step, as always, is to document the process with a letter of restoration/authenticity opinion.

A job like this is a lot of work and is not inexpensive, but the end result has preserved a relic and made it something worth displaying. The documentation of its restoration and its authentication as a piece of 1972 White Sox history cements its future value if and when it is sold, even if that time is many decades from now.

I probably do about three restorations like this each month, though most are not this dramatic. I rarely take the time to photograph and write them up like this— it just takes too much time. In this case, spelling it all out, like the restoration process itself, was worth the effort.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Bill Melton 1972 Chicago White Sox Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: June 21, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0621J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson-made zipper-front road jersey of third baseman Bill Melton of the 1972 Chicago White Sox. Light blue warp-knit body with old-style nylon uniform braid in red/white/red banding the sleeve ends and sewn tight to the edge around the collar. Team tagging and player name sewn into the back of the collar. The size tagging is illegible, but measures as a size 42 which matches other examples worn by the player at this stage of his career, and reasonable for his size and weight (6' 2" 200 lbs). As is typical of Wilson knits, the inside of the placket and around the back of the neck are lined with white linen for player comfort.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Only parts of the original Wilson's manufacturer tag remain stitched to the outside of the left tail, and exhibits a great deal of wear with more than half of it missing. On the lower outside left front tail is a rectangle of jersey fabric, with hand chain stitch embroidery in Navy Blue, matching exemplars, "72 Set 3". The player name, "Melton" is hand chain stitched in red onto a piece of jersey-matching fabric and is correctly sewn into the inside of the back of the collar, both tags in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher. The stitching holding the perimeter of the collar tag in place is invisible from the outside back of the jersey, indicating that the tag was stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, as is correct.

Restoration Performed: To begin, the jersey was in very poor condition, stripped of its numbers and front crest. The collar and sleeve trim was mostly gone, leaving behind only its attaching thread. Significant reverse-fade marks and remaining thread clearly showed that the original "Chicago" MLB crest had been present, sewn across both panels of the front, and besides its original #14, it had worn #60, most likely in spring training in multiple years after its regular season use was finished. The fabric beneath the "60" was very bright blue, indicating to me that this jersey spent more years with these numbers applied than it had with its original 14. The fabric of this jersey was exceptionally dirty and sun-faded, but also was stained unevenly with red, as if it had been soaked with other red garments in a laundry accident. The body of the jersey ranged from the near-original bright blue under the numbers and front crest, to a dull grayish-purple on much of the back and the tops of the shoulder. Discolored marks at the shoulders look like it was stored on a clothes hanger in the sun for a long time, causing additional fading. The original Talon zipper had failed, and was partly detached. The white linen placket lining was surprisingly intact given the condition of the rest of the jersey.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Besides the staining and fading, the body the jersey was still intact without holes or split seams. I aggressively hand-washed the jersey multiple times with different detergents, and it surrendered a fair amount of dirt into the wash water leaving it considerably brighter. I hand scrubbed the most discolored areas with a diluted solution of chlorine bleach to try to even out the color. I replaced the zipper with a brass one very similar to the original.

Using the original team pattern from my archive, I reproduced the front Chicago crest, and starting with team number patterns modified to match the shapes seen in the ghosts. I recreated the player numbers for the back and the sleeves. I used identical vintage trim to replace the missing and ruined trim on the sleeves and collar. The small "White Sox" adornment on the tail of the Chicago wordmark was recreated in a machine embroidery stitch in white thread. To match the patina/age of the jersey itself, all the sewn lettering and the trim was media blasted to remove its sheen and then organically dyed to dull the bright colors to make it better match the fabric of the jersey it was sewn to. It was stitched with off-white thread.

The result of this restoration is the rejuvenation of a jersey that had been left for dead, and it now appears presentable and in approximately the condition it would have been in after a season of use in MLB plus multiple years of spring training utility. The ghosts of the numbers "60" that had been on the back and sleeves remain visible as the fabric that had been beneath them is brighter than the surrounding areas. The "14" on the back is purposely slightly distorted from having been aged and steamed prior to application, and its shape exactly matches the original ghosts on the jersey back.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is a rarely seen example of a first-year knit White Sox game worn jersey, uncommon today because most were simply worn out and discarded. It presents well and is faithfully restored. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Bill Melton of the 1972 Chicago White Sox.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com

Mickey Mantle 1957 New York Yankees Home Jersey - Restoration

The jersey we have today to restore and authenticate happens to be Mickey Mantle's 1957 Yankees home jersey. That was an MVP year for him, a World Series year, and this jersey has been photo matched to him to his only game in his career where he hit for the cycle. It is here because it needs to be restored so it can go to auction.

The first question I am usually asked when people learn that I am restoring baseball jerseys is, "Restored? Why? What is the matter with them?" It's hard for people to grasp the idea that a historic Yankees jersey from an iconic player in a record-breaking season would be anything other than coveted and well preserved. And that's just not the case. Like with nearly all Yankees jerseys through the early 1990s, this one was sent to the minor leagues after its use in New York was completed. The Yankees had a huge number of farm teams, and because none of them used the iconic "NY" on the front, all of the jerseys had to be stripped for reuse. That was the case with this one. It went to Binghamton where it was repurposed as a Binghamton Triplets jersey

As received, the Triplets rest from the late 50s was still stitched to the front. Mantle's number seven was on the back, and his name is embroidered in the tail, one can only imagine the thrill of the player to whom this jersey was issued in the minors, having a chance to wear it.

© GameWornGuides.com

Looking at it more closely, we turn it inside out and find that it is absolutely filthy. It looks like coffee grounds and cat poop have been rubbed into it. There's a large L shape rip in the back of one of the sleeves. Looking at it, there's no sign that the Yankees crest was on the front, but I know if we some detective work we can find out more.

Putting it on the light table, we can see a few very faint marks where the Yankees New York crest had been on the front (more on that in a moment) but I also notice the signature puckering underneath the Triplets logo. That tells me it was washed many, many times with that felt emblem stitched in place. Puckering happens when the fabrics shrink at different rates during hot water washing. The amount of puckering tells me that it was probably used for multiple seasons in Binghamton before it was retired.

When it came to me, this jersey had already been photo matched. Yankees jerseys are easier than many to photomatch to game use for two reasons. First, the pinstripes help a great deal, we can see where they align at the seams, where the buttons are placed in relation to them, and where the emblems and numbers are stitched compared to the location of the stripes. And secondly, the shear number of photos of the Yankees that appeared in the media compared to other teams. The New York Press was all over them, and especially photos of Mantle were in the newspaper daily. Two different companies photo matched this jersey to over a dozen games including the game that Mantle hit for the cycle.

© GameWornGuides.com

The light table shows that nothing has been changed on the back of this jersey, and the very fine and even puckering pattern of the flannel fabric beneath the felt number is impossible to reproduce. My conclusion is that the seven on the back is the original one and it is never been touched.

The first step is to carefully remove the Triplets crest from the front. This needs to be done with a magnifying glass, with a seam ripper, and done one stitch at a time.

After the Triplets crest has been removed, we can get started with the light table. We want to look not just for evidence of the Yankees crest on the front, but also the exact placement of it. With any luck it will match the photo matching documents that have already been completed.

(shown here on the light table but without any photo enhancement) So why is the Triplets shadow so prominent? The reason is primarily because the fabric beneath it is thicker than the surrounding fabric. As this jersey was washed dozens of times with the Triplets crest on the front, that area was protected in the washing machine and stayed thicker. Now with it removed, it is harder for the light to pass through the place it had been sewn. Sometimes the darker area is because of the application of glue that held down the lettering. That is not the case here, once unstitched the Triplets logo came right off.

© GameWornGuides.com

Using a combination of techniques which include using ultraviolet light, the light table and enhancing the image with all of the tools in Adobe Photoshop, we can now clearly see the outline of the Yankees emblem. If you look, you can also see the very clear darker outline of the Triplets emblem that was definitely on this shirt for longer than the Yankees NY was ever there.

Legacy ghost imprints on fabric are generally caused by four things: 1) Glue and dye transfer from the old emblem. 2) Fabric compression around the outline edges caused by the sewing machine thread. 3) Noticeable difference in fabric thickness under what would have been the placement of the original emblem. (This occurs when that spot is protected from abrasion during machine-washing by the old emblem, so as the surrounding fabric is abraded it becomes marginally thinner/more threadbare, and allows light to pass through it more easily, the result is a darker area on the light table showing the location of the old emblem.) 4) Small holes caused by the removal of the old emblem. I especially look for holes at the spots where the old and new emblem's lines may have intersected— these small spots are made especially weaker because they have been sewn over and had thread ripped out twice, making them more likely to produce a hole of some size.

In this case, there are no holes surrounding the perimeter of the Yankees NY emblem. It must have been carefully removed, back then. So why are the outline-edges darker? This is an artifact of zigzag stitching. Zigzag stitching was only introduced on commercial sewing machines in the late 1950s, and prior to then, all felt lettering was straight-stitched. When straight stitching is removed it leaves almost no mark, especially if the jersey has been washed many times afterwards. But zigzag stitching compresses the fibers in the fabric very slightly along the stitching line, moving the fibers closer together with the tension of the thread in the machine. The fiber compression causes a dark line in those spots. Because the original seven on the back is still zigzag stitched, we can be confident that the Yankees emblem on the front of this jersey was also zigzag stitched as well. Thanks to this artifact, we can see exactly where the NY logo had been placed. And not surprisingly, it matches exactly the photo match documents from 1957.

© GameWornGuides.com

This forensic work done, we now move to the next step which can be something more than nerve-wracking. We have to wash this priceless garment. I take consolation in the fact that these fabrics were meant to be washed from the beginning, so we are not doing anything revolutionary here. A basin of warm water and a quarter cup of Woolite is where we begin. I gently rub the fabric against itself to try to loosen up all of the dirt that is inside. A couple of stubborn stains require a spray of Oxiclean which helps loosen them up and get them out of the shirt. After washing, I rinse the shirt four times with a basin of clean water to get all of the soap out of it. Once it drips dry into the sink, I roll it tightly in a cotton towel to wick all of the water out of it. We will not be wringing this jersey dry! After this step is completed it is barely damp. I then hang it to air dry.

Re-creating the Yankees crest on the front is not a quick and simple process. It involves several steps to make sure that we get it perfectly correct. Going back to 1957, there were no computers or laser cutters. Original team name crests were most commonly cut by hand from felt, the outline set with a powder-dusted vellum pattern. Closely spaced pinholes in the vellum paper allowed talcum powder to fall through and define the edge of the emblem onto a piece of wool felt that was usually backed with a thin layer gauze-like dressmaker's interfacing to keep it from fraying. The emblem was then cut by hand using a pair of sharp scissors.

I have a library of scans of original Yankees crests going back to the 1920s. Before I re-create anything, I look in my library to see what I have that is very close to the emblem on the shirt. In this case, one of my standard 1957 archival emblems matched almost exactly. It needed only a slight bit of tweaking, that was probably related to shrinkage of the fabric of the jersey to make it match. We want to make sure that the new emblem covers the old ghost as much as possible. I was asked whether or not it made sense to find another more common-player 1957 Yankees jersey at auction and steal the front emblem off of it to stitch it in place, using a vintage replacement rather than making a new one. I recommended against this for a couple of reasons. First of all most of the 1957 jerseys that are offered at auction have replacement front crests; they are not the original ones for the same reasons I mentioned before. And secondly it is very unlikely that even an original crest would fit the shrinkage pattern on this jersey exactly. We'd end up with some sort of a mismatch that would be visible on the light table. I have the original Marino wool that was used back in the day, and I recommended that my recreation would be a better solution, and the jersey owner agreed.

© GameWornGuides.com

Here is the completed job– everything I've learned in my years doing this type of work goes into a conservation like this one. It has to be perfect; it is a piece of American history.

The final step is always a complete professional letter of opinion, documenting the restoration. I have included my evaluation here for you to read.

If you have enjoyed these stories of restoration, please visit my blog, https://www.facebook.com/gameworngnuides. There are many more shared there.

Photomatch evaluation done by Davius Sports, www.DaviousSports.com

© GameWornGuides.com

Back

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Mickey Mantle 1957 New York Yankees Game Worn Home Jersey, MVP Year

Examination Date: February 4, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0204J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Spalding made seven button cream colored professional grade flannel with Navy chalk pinstripe, size 44 New York Yankees home jersey, tagged for Mickey Mantle. Navy felt NY team logo is stitched to the left chest, and the player's number "7" is sewn in felt to the center of the back. The sleeves are set-in and the length is mid-bicep, appropriate to 1957 standards and matches period photos of the player. There is a 4" L-shaped tear in the bottom back of the right sleeve that is un-repaired. Some light staining remains on the right chest that oddly originated on the inside of the jersey, most likely from improper storage. There are a few tiny holes in the lower back, each smaller than a grain of rice, but otherwise the jersey is in generally good condition. A light table evaluation reveals that the number on the back is original and uncontrived, with only minor puckering of the jersey fabric beneath it from wash shrinkage. The seven plastic-pearl buttons appear to be original. This jersey has been partially restored, and details follow.

In 1957 Mickey Mantle played in 144 games for the Yankees, hitting a stellar .365 with 34 home runs. That year he won his second consecutive MVP award, leading both leagues in runs scored and walks and recording a career-high batting average of .365, second best in the AL. The Yankees fell to the Milwaukee Braves in that year's World Series. That season, Mantle reached base more times than he made outs (319 to 312), one of two seasons in which he achieved the feat. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia) On July 23, 1957 Mantle hit for 'the cycle' at Yankee Stadium, hitting a home run that nearly left the stadium (SABR).

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Spalding manufacturer's tag in the proper style for 1957 is stitched into the back of the neck. 1957 was a transition year for Spalding tagging; this is the earlier style, without the dot over the "T". It is sewn in the collar instead of the tail, and both styles of tags and placement locations are seen on 1957 examples, likely the old tags were simply used up until they were gone. The Spalding tag is sewn with the stitching invisible from the outside back of the collar, which means it was correctly sewn there before the placket was sewn closed. Punch-sewn under the right edge of the tag is a small white "44" flag tag noting the size. The chest measures 44", and matches the size worn by Mantle at this stage of his career. Near the bottom of the left front tail is chain stitched in Navy Blue embroidery thread, "Mantle 7 57" (player number 7, 1957) in the familiar hand of the factory stitcher, and matching exemplars. On the reverse flap of the tail is the small Spalding white with Navy and red machine-embroidered printing wash instructions tag, slightly discolored from use. Pinch-sewn under its right edge is a small white flag tab

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

As received and prior to restoration, showing extensive stains that oddly are mostly on the inside and soaked through to the outside. Stains on the right shoulder could well be dirt stuck to remnants of pine tar. At bottom, torn right sleeve appears to have been caught on something and then yanked away, sacrificing a small piece of cloth at the corner of the "L" shaped tear. Bottom right, the fabric beneath the partly-removed Triplets crest shows that there is not dye-staining but that the fabric is both cleaner and denser where it was covered by the emblem. The slight blue tint is mostly micro-fibers of the felt embedded in the flannel fabric.

Continued, overleaf

cardboard patterns. The ghost on this jersey is a good match to one of my historic patterns, and digitally overlaying the pattern over the ghost provided a satisfying match. Photos are provided in this document.

Analysis of the ghosts gives us some insight as to the life of this garment. On the light table, the most obvious element is that the TRIPLETS lettering ghost shows up as darker in color. This is most likely caused not from any glue or staining on the shirt, but is instead an artifact from the increased thickness of the fabric that was protected beneath it compared to the rest of the jersey, which has lost some of its density after dozens of washings. The original NY that was on the jersey, likely for a single season's of use shows much less difference in fabric thickness beneath it (it was probably used in 1958 spring training and it may have been kept and used as an emergency backup by Mantle in 1958). This tells me the jersey was probably used for multiple years in Birmingham; far longer than it served as a Yankees jersey. Next, the ghost of the original NY is most apparent as a slightly darker outline around its perimeter. This is likely not glue, instead it tells me that it was sewn with a zig zag stitch, which nearly-microscopically compressed the fibers of the cloth closer together along the stitching line, allowing less light to pass through when shone from behind. The number on back is Above, closely matching wool felt was used to reproduce the front Yankees crest. The "7" on back is the original, notice very fine puckering beneath from repeated warm water washing. At right, there of the original 7 mother of pearl plastic buttons. Below, the post-washing light table images enhanced with contrast show the ghost of the original NY. At center the same image presented as a negative, and at right an overlay of one of the period-correct Yankees front crest patterns from my archives.

Continued, overleaf

continued next page

© GameWornGuides.com

Tagging compared to exemplars: The jersey in review is shown at top. Directly below is Enos Slaughter's 1957 jersey (exemplars have been authenticated by others.) It has the same style tagging as the Mantle, old style Spalding tag in the collar with flag tab for size. The Crosetti and Kubiek examples at bottom use the new for 1957 tag with the dot over the "i" an the Spalding tag sewn above the player name/number designation all sewn on the outer left tail. The chain stitch embroidery "handwriting" matches in style.

that says SET 1 1957. All appear original to the jersey and are free of alteration or contrivance.

Wear and Repairs/Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey exhibited moderate/heavy use and wear. It wore the Navy felt front work-mark across its chest of the Birmingham (Alabama) Triplets, a Yankees level-A farm team, passed to the minor leagues after its MLB service was through. This recycling practice was common by nearly every team in baseball, and while it may seem unimaginable that a future Hall of Famer's game jersey from an MVP / World Series year would be treated so callously, that's just the way it was always done. Consider: In 1958, the Yankees had eleven farm teams in their massive enterprise, and sending the MLB hand-me downs of everything from uniforms to bats to catcher's equipment was a budget decision made without any sense of nostalgia. Collecting baseball memorabilia was just not a "thing" in 1957, and the Yankees stuck with their practice of recycling uniforms to the minors well into the 1990s.

The player number "7" on the back is original, and a close examination of the inside of the shirt shows very minor, even puckering of the jersey fabric beneath the sewn on lettering. That, combined with the good condition of the tags and the darkness of the player team tagging embroidery thread tell me that this jersey was generally well taken care of in its lifetime, and was neither washed in water that was too hot nor washed with bleach.

Examined on a light table, the ghost of the original chest NY insignia was slightly visible, but was mostly obscured by the Triplets crest. While the jersey body itself was overall relatively clean, the inside of the jersey had been splashed with a thick brown substance of unknown origin (almost looking like coffee grounds), and the large tear in the sleeve (it appears to have been caught on something; it is repairable but a small piece of the fabric is missing right at the intersection of the "L") makes it appear that it was carelessly stored. Luckily, there is little to no evidence of insect damage, so common with improper storage.

When I received the jersey for evaluation and restoration, my first action was to take detailed photos of the jersey, both inside and out. I put the jersey on the light table and photographed the front where the Yankees emblem would have been. Next, I very carefully removed the Triplets lettering, then I took photos on the light table again. The felt from the Triplets crest did not leave behind any major staining as is so common from felt fabric that has been pressed together for many years; however it did leave trace fibers of its felt pressed into the weave of the flannel fabric which remain there. Finally, I spot-treated the staining and hand-washed the garment, which brightened it considerably and removed the worst of the staining.

With the Triplets lettering removed, the light table revealed more of the Yankees insignia's shadow on the front. There are multiple slight variants of the Yankee crest, in that era there was no such thing as a standard digital pattern like we would have today; while some were die-cut, rather mostly they were hand-cut from felt with scissors with help from powder-dusted original and is zig-zag stitched, "new technology" for 1957, as the first such sewing machines appeared around 1955. For decades prior, uniform felt lettering was always sewn with a straight-stitch, appropriate for a non-woven fabric which would not unravel without a hem. Felt as formerly straight stitched to flannel is far more difficult to observe on the light table because there is far less fabric compression.

Continued, overleaf

I cut the Yankees team crest from Navy Marino wool using my matching pattern, first backing it with a thin layer of heat-adhered binding as was done originally to keep the edges tight in the wash. Again, with the assist of the light table, I placed the crest exactly over the original ghost, then restitched it using the same size/frequency stitch, notably done on a 1957 vintage sewing machine.

As restored, the jersey presents well, though no attempt was made to fix the torn sleeve. There is some staining and yellowing of the fabric especially around the neck and on the sleeves, and on the right chest where the inside-staining was the most serious. The thicker fabric that was beneath the Triplets crest is apparent, and there is some yellowing and minor trace fiber fabric adhesion from the old felt to the weave of the flannel jersey from having been attached to it for so many years, both during and after its use. I would differentiate these marks from color-transfer staining, which is not present on this jersey. Staining is visible and noticeable in natural light.

Conclusion: During the 1950s, few Yankees jerseys, regardless of the stardom of the original player, were spared a trip to the minor leagues, where most of them were stripped and then re-lettered. This one followed that familiar journey, though it appears to have been generally well treated in its second life. While there is a rip in the back of the right sleeve, and there was a great deal of dirt inside the jersey when I received it, I would judge these as likely artifacts of improper storage. Once cleaned, overall the jersey fabric is still supple and is not threadbare. The jersey retains its original set of buttons. Its tagging matches exemplars and it shows moderate to heavy game wear.

I have determined that the back number and the tagging is original and uncontrived. In my faithful restoration I was able to clean the dried dirt residue splattered on the inside, lighten the stains with careful cleaning, and and determine exactly the shape and location of the original front cresting. I cleaned the jersey, after removing the Triplets crest, and replaced it with a material-correct Yankees crest that exactly matches both the period pattern and exactly covers the ghost on the fabric.

There are quite simply very few remaining Yankees jerseys at all from this period, as most were converted to minor league livery and then used to destruction; I suspect often discarded likely without many ever being recognized as having been MLB Yankees jerseys in their first life. Clearly this jersey from one of the icons of the Game in an MVP and World Series year is a significant piece of baseball history, and to have had the opportunity to authenticate and properly restore this historic piece is an honor indeed.

William F. Henderson
Principal, and Professional Authenticator

© GameWornGuides.com